When a wife applies to enforce a maintenance order and in a single application includes arrears which cover several months, the Magistrate has power to sentence the defaulter to more than one month's imprisonment. He may sentence the defaulter to one month's imprisonment for each full month's arrears of maintenance and to a further month for any broken period over and above that completed number of month's arrears which falls short of another complete month. Where after an order for the payment of maintenance has been made if it is not complied with or if there is a refusal to pay it, the Magistrate cannot straightaway order the defaulter to be committed to jail. The first thing that must be done is to issue a distress warrant and it is only for the whole or part of each months allowance that remains unpaid after the execution of the warrant that imprisonment may be awarded. A man cannot be sentenced to imprisonment a second time for default in respect of the same identical arrears. The only method provided for the recovery of costs awarded is by distress warrant. An application for enforcement or execution may be made to any Magistrate in a place where the person against whom the order is made. An accused in a case of criminal conspiracy for the murder of a man with whose wife he was alleged to have been carrying on an intrigue, also recorded as a Magistrate a dying declaration of the deceased, the husband of the woman. The Magistrate granted bail to the accused on the ground that there was a discrepancy in the evidence of the approvers but there was nothing to suggest that the discrepancy was incapable of explanation and would be fatal to the prosecution case.

Held, that the grant of bail in the unusual circumstances of the case was not justified. (Davis, C.J. and Tyabji, J.) EMPEROR v. ABUBAKAR.

The liability of a surety must continue so long as the surety has not been discharged or the bail bond cancelled and the accused taken into the custody of the Court. The accused will be taken in the custody of the Court only when his bail bond is cancelled. In his bond the accused bound himself to appear in the Court on a fixed date and thereafter as directed by the Court and the surety bound himself that the accused would so attend and in default of his so attending, he bound himself to forfeit Rs. 1,000. The surety produced the accused on the fixed date. During the course of the proceedings the accused with the Court's permission left the Court-house to say his prayers and absconded. The bail bond was not cancelled at that time nor was the surety discharged.

Held, that the surety's liability did not cease merely on the production of the accused in Court but continued thereafter and the forfeiture of his bond was justified.

Held, further, that there were mitigating circumstances in the case whereby the penalty for forfeiture could be reduced to something nominal inasmuch as the surety was taken off his guard. (Davis, C.J. and Lobo, J.) MURADALI v. EMPEROR.

Before an order under S. 516-A, Cr. P. Where on a complaint being made of a criminal breach of trust in respect of certain property in the hands of the accused, the Magistrate sends the complaint to the police for investigation under S. 202, Cr. P. Code, it cannot be said that an offence appears to him at that stage to have been committed, so as to justify an ex parte order directing possession of the property to be handed over to the complainant under S. 516-A. Such an order is also illegal on the ground that the property is not produced before the Court, as the power of a Criminal Court to make orders under S. 516-A, is limited to property which is produced before it. An investigation by the police under S. 202, Cr. P. S. 523, Cr. P. Code, empowers a Magistrate to pass orders with regard to the disposal of property which is alleged or suspected to have been stolen or is found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence. The police started investigation into a case in respect of certain cattle as an offence falling under S. 411, I. P. Code. Upon receipt of some information they came to the conclusion that the offence did not fall under S. 411 but under S. 403, I. P. Code. Since the offence was not cognizable the police sent a referred charge sheet to that effect. The Magistrate agreed and ordered the cattle the subject-matter of the complaint to be returned to the complainant.

——S. 526—Reasonal apprehension of prejudice—Magistrate threatening defence witness with prosecution for negligence and issuing warrant of arrest to defence witness after application for stay for purpose of applying for transfer—If ground for transfer.

Where a magistrate issues a warrant of arrest for a defence witness without complying with the requirements of S. 70, Cr. P. Code, at a time when the accused intends to apply to the High Court for a transfer of the case from the file of that magistrate, and threatens to prosecute a witness for the defence for negligence—which he has no power to do—his acts are not only very ill-advised, but also well-calculated to cause an apprehension in the mind of the accused that the magistrate was prejudiced against him. Such acts in fact go far to suggest that the magistrate is in that condition. That would be good ground for a transfer of the case. ——S. 526—Scope—Application for transfer—Considerations for High Court—Cumulative effect of incidents or observations to be considered.

In an application for transfer of a case under S 526, Cr. P. Code, the High Court has to see whether or not particular observations made by the Magistrate or acts done by him during the trial will raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not get a fair trial in that Court. Though some of the incidents alleged may not deserve notice, if a serious incident is alleged and is not denied by the Magistrate, the High Court will consider what the cumulative effect of all that has happened is likely to be in the mind of the accused. ——S. 526—Transfer—Grounds—Cross-complaints on same facts—Dismissal of one—Application for transfer of other—If to be allowed.

Where one of two cross-complaints is dismissed under S. 203, Cr. P. Code, it cannot be said that the complainant's apprehension that he will not get a fair and impartial trial in the cross-complaint against him arising on the same facts is unreasonable. It is therefore desirable that the case against him should be transferred to another Magistrate. (Lakshmana Rao, J.) SADASIVA GOUNDAN v. EMPEROR. 1941 M.W.N. 844 (2).

——S. 526—Transfer—Grounds for —Prominent person figuring in case—If ground for transfer.

Magistrates will not be deterred from doing their duty merely because a person concerned is a zamindar, an M. L.A., or a prominent person. All men are equal before the law, and a zamindar, an M.L.A., or a prominent person has no special privilege under the Criminal Procedure Code, and should any such person make or aid in making a false complaint or give false evidence on oath, then the law must be put in motion against him in the same way as against any other person. Consequently the fact that such a person is figuring in a case is no ground for transferring it. ——S. 526—Transfer — Grounds — Magistrate subordinate to District Magistrate who sanctioned prosecution—If ground for transfer of case to Sessions Court.

It cannot be accepted as a general principle that no Magistrate subordinate to the District Magistrate can deal with a case in which the District Magistrate has sanctioned the prosecution. It will not therefore be right for the High Court to transfer a case from a Magistrate to the Sessions Court on the ground merely that the Magistrate in question is subordinate to the District Magistrate who sanctioned the prosecution. But if there are reasons for thinking that in fact a particular Magistrate was likely to be influenced by the opinion of the District Magistrate, the High Court will not hesitate to transfer the case to the Sessions Court. ——S. 526—Transfer — Grounds — Remarks by Magistrate during examination of prosecution witnesses adverse to accused—Magistrate insisting on stamped petition for each objection on behalf of accused to statements of witnesses—Effect—Reasonable apprehension.

A Magistrate has to be very cautious in making remarks or observations during the course of a trial, lest a particular observation should raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not get a fair trial in his Court. If a Magistrate during the examination of the prosecution witness makes a remark that the witnesses who did not support the prosecution case have been won over by the accused and that their evidence would not affect the merits of the case is calculated to and must necessarily raise in the mind of the accused a reasonable apprehension that he would not get a fair trial. Further, where the Magistrate does not allow the pleader for the accused to raise objections orally to certain statements by witness and insists on a stamped petition being filed for every objection raised on behalf of the accused, the cumulative effect is to create in the mind of the accused an apprehension that he would not get a fair and impartial trial, and in such a case there are sufficient grounds for ordering a transfer of the case. ——Ss. 526 and 528—Transfer—Notice—Necessity—Magistrate party to prior decision on similar point—If a disqualification bear a similar point again.

It is improper to transfer a case without giving notice to the accused. The mere fact that a Court had decided a particular point in one way on a previous occasion is no reason for holding him to be unfit to decide it on a subsequent occasion. Questions of fact have always to be decided on the facts of each case. (Pollock, J.) YESHWANT RAO v. EMPEROR. 1941 N.L.J. 619.

——S. 528—Failure to give notice—If affects transfer.

Mere failure or omission to give notice to the opposite party will not make an order of transfer illegal and would be no ground to set it aside. It is a mere irregularity. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try an offence under S. 220, Penal Code. ——S. 530 (p)—Scope of—Trial of offence less serious than one committed—Effect—Interference by High Court.

The effect of S. 530 (p), Cr. P. Code, is that if a Magistrate tries an offender for an offence beyond his jurisdiction his proceedings shall be void. If the Magistrate entirely overlooks some fact which would carry the offence beyond his jurisdiction and tries the accused for a lesser offence, he cannot be held to have acted without jurisdiction. The question whether he has or has not deliberately overlooked the circumstances is one of fact. If, on the other hand, he does not overlook the circumstance, but after his attention has been drawn to it, he deliberately ignores it, his proceedings would be improper and the High Court will interfere in revision. If the Magistrate really believes that the whole body of facts revealed to him constituted an offence triable by him, and he has in fact jurisdiction to try that offence, his proceedings are not improper and the High Court will not interfere. The wording of S. 540, Cr P. S. 540 is not limited only for the benefit of the accused, and it will not be an improper exercise of the powers of the Court to summon a witness under the section merely because the evidence supports the case for the prosecution and not that of the accused. The powers of Court is neither circumscribed nor fettered in any way to arrive at the truth in a criminal trial. S. 540, Cr. P. A witness though he had turned hostile in the committing Court, must be made to be present in the Sessions Court, so that he can be examined under S. 540, if the prosecution fail to examine him. There is no reason why such a witness should not be tendered for cross-examination. ——Ss 548 and 554—Discretion of Court to allow inspection of record—Proper exercise of—Right of parties to inspect record to decide whether certified copy is necessary—Bombay High Court Criminal Circular No. 160 A.

There is a common law right of inspection of public documents by a person interested in the document so far as may be necessary for the protection of such interest. There is no doubt that except as controlled by any rule made by the High Court under S. 554, Cr. P. Code, a Magistrate or a Judge of a subordinate Criminal Court has a discretion to allow inspection of the record of his Court, but such discretion has to be exercised judicially. In exercising his discretion a Magistrate or Judge would be bound to have regard to the terms of S. 548, Cr. P. Code, which gives a right to a party to have copies of certain specified parts of the record and it would be difficult, and generally improper for him to refuse inspection of any document of which a party is entitled to a certified copy under that section. The right to a certified copy pre-supposes a right of inspection. To require a party to take certified copies of all documents on the record in order to determine of which documents he really requires copies would involve unnecessary expense and trouble. Therefore, prima facie, under S. 548, a party would have an implied right to ask the presiding Magistrate or Judge to allow him inspection of the record referred to in the section. Bombay High Court Circular No. 160-A (1934), is not exclusive and does not deprive the Court of the right which it previously enjoyed, and exercised in practice of granting inspection of the whole record to a party properly entitled thereto. Where a Magistrate discharges the accused, the complainant is clearly entitled under S. 548, Cr.P. Code, as a person affected by the order of discharge, to require certified copies of the orders, depositions and other parts of the record. It is altogether unreasonable to insist that he must take certified copies in order to determine whether he really wants such copies. The more rational and proper course is to allow him to inspect the documents in order to make up his mind whether he wants to have certified copies or not. The High Courts have no doubt the power under S. 561-A, Cr. P. The jurisdiction is of an extraordinary nature and has to be exercised with great care and caution. A Sessions Judge has never possessed any such authority. If he does exercise it, it is not curable under S. 537. It is clearly an assumption of authority which is not conferred on the Sessions Judge by Cr. P. Code and therefore is an illegality, and the irrebuttable presumption arises that the accused must have been prejudiced thereby. (Roberts, C.J. and Dunkley, J.) A. H. GHANDHI v. THE KING.

——S. 562—Applicability and scope—Offence committed deliberately by experienced police officers—Proper sentence—Release under S. 562—Propriety of.

S. 562, Cr P. The section is not intended to be applied to experienced men of the world such as police officers, who deliberately flout the law and commit offences which they know are strongly condemned by their superior officers but which they persist in doing in order that it may not be said of them that they have not been able to detect a petty crime. In cases of rioting and murder under S. 149 and S. 34, I. P. Code, it is usual to charge the accused individually also for the acts alleged to have been committed by them. This would draw the attention of the accused in particular to the acts which they are said to have committed. When this is not done, the accused may have cause for arguing that when the main charge of rioting and acting in concert in pursuance of a common intention has failed, they should not be convicted for the particular acts committed by them. But when the omission to do so has caused no miscarriage of justice, and the accused have known exactly what acts they are alleged to have done, the conviction cannot be set aside. In the case of a series of complaints of an offence alleged to have been committed on fifteen occasions, it is not permissible for the trying Magistrate to hear the evidence and write a judgment in one of the cases and then proceed to pass merely consequential orders in the other cases. Criminal cases cannot, like civil suits, be consolidated and tried together on the same evidence except within the limits as to the joinder of charges laid down in the Cr. P. Code. It would be permissible for the Magistrate to try the charges in groups of three. The procedure of hearing the evidence in one case only is illegal, and the illegality is not cured by the fact that the accused or his pleader consents to the procedure. ——Confession— Value—Only one arrested out of seventeen implicated by confession—Persons mentioned in first information report, not included—Inference.

It is a very fair inference to draw that, where a confessing accused has named 17 or 18 people of whom it was worthwhile for the police to arrest only one, there is something very wrong with the confession. It is absolutely worthless as against any one but the person who confessed. At the same time, it should be said that the absence from the confession of the names of persons who had been denounced in the first information report, is strong evidence that the confession was at any rate not secured by pressure from the police. A conviction must be based upon evidence. If there is no evidence, it is not proper even to put an accused person on his defence. In cases where the accused are charged with "aconitine" poisoning and the "aconitine" is found in the matter vomited by the deceased just before his death, it is necessary that the Chemical Examiner's report should be clear about the category of aconitine because there are many varieties of aconitine, some of which are poisonous and some non-poisonous and known as "pseudo aconitine," the two types varying in chemical composition but having toxicological resemblances and producing similar pharmacological results. From proof by circumstantial evidence four things are essential: They are (1) that the circumstances from which the conclusion is drawn should be fully established, (2) that all the facts should be consistent with the hypothesis, (3) that the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency, (4) that the circumstances should, to moral certainty, actually exclude every hypothesis but the one proposed to be proved. ———Evidence—Circumstantial evidence—Sufficiency for conviction—Rule—Murder and robbery—Accused producing property stolen on the occasion but offering no explanation—Accused belonging to same village as deceased and known to deceased—Inference—Duty of Court to find out rational explanation—Intention to commit robbery and murder—Inference.

The law in relation to circumstantial evidence is that such evidence must be consistent, and consistent only with the guilt of the accused, and that if the evidence is consistent with any other rational explanation, then there is an element of doubt of which the accused must be given the benefit. No doubt one of the circumstances which has to be taken into account is the fact that the accused has offered no explanation, or has offered a particular explanation; but it must be borne in mind that an accused in this country cannot go into the box and is not bound to give any explanation at all. The fact that he does not open his mouth cannot be used against him. The fact that an accused is not willing to admit that he took part in a robbery which is proved against him ought not to prejudice the question whether he committed murder at the same time. It cannot be laid down that it is not the duty of the Court to invent possible explanations. It is clearly the duty of counsel defending an accused to point out that the evidence is quite consistent with an explanation which fits in with the accused's innocence. In many cases the accused is not able to employ counsel, and in other cases counsel are asked to defend by the Court, and such counsel may be inexperienced, and in such cases the Judge is bound to ask himself whether there is any rational explanation of the evidence which is consistent with the innocence of the accused, and if there is, he is not justified in convicting. A reasonable explanation of the evidence should not be rejected because not offered by the accused. Three persons were charged with murder and robbery. It was proved that the three accused produced property which had been stolen on the occasion of the robbery and murder. They did not offer any explanation of the possession of the property, but merely said that they did not produce it. The murder was committed with a crowbar which was found at the scene of the murder after the crime. It was stained with human blood. All the accused came from the same village as the deceased who knew all of them.

Held, that on the evidence the only rational explanation which fitted in with the whole evidence was that the accused committed the robbery and that pursuant to their common intention to rob the deceased and avoid detection they had the further intention of murdering the deceased and that they carried that intention out. ——Evidence—Panchnama—Admissibility and use of—Putting in of panchnama by police witness without calling panch—Propriety.

If the police rely on a panchnama in a criminal case, they must call a panch to prove it. The panchnama is merely a record of what a panch sees, and the only use to which it can properly be put is that when the panch goes into the witness-box and swears as to what he saw, the panchnama can be used as a contemporary record to refresh his memory. But a police officer is not entitled to give evidence of what the panch told him, that he saw, and that is what it comes to if a police-officer is allowed to put in a panchnama. A police witness may state that he held a panchnama and offer to produce the record if the accused asks for it, but he cannot bring it on record in his evidence in chief. If the police hold a panchnama, and do not offer to call the panch, an inference may be drawn against them from the fact that the panch is not submitted for cross-examination. The putting in of a panchnama without calling the panch is not only an infringement of the rules of evidence, but it is unfair to the accused, and should not be permitted. The proper course in such circumstances is for the Public Prosecutor to see that the witness is present in the Court, and for the Court, if the witness is really important, to examine him as a Court witness and allow both sides to cross-examine the witness. Where the Legislature has provided that an offence because of its gravity or because of the special knowledge required in its trial, shall be tried by a Sessions Court, a first class Magistrate, however proper be his motives, should not himself remove that case from the Court of Session, and try it himself by merely altering the numbers of the sections, for after all, the numbers of the sections are mere labels, and what is to be looked at is the allegation of facts. A Magistrate cannot therefore usurp a jurisdiction to himself he did not possess by placing an offence, which rightly falls under S. 220, Penal Code, under S. 342 or S. 347, Penal Code, so as to give himself jurisdiction and trying it himself. ——Jurisdiction—Trial by Magistrate of case triable exclusively by Court of Session—Charge under serious offence left out and trial held under minor charges—Acquittal—Legality.

A case exclusively triable by a Court of Session cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate by leaving out the more serious charges and confining the trial to the minor charges only. If the Magistrate tries the case on the minor charges leaving out the more serious charge, and passes an order of acquittal, it is without jurisdiction and must be set aside, for if the more serious charge exclusively triable by the Court of Session were framed, it would not be open to pass any order of acquittal at all in the case. 22 persons were sent up by the police on a charge of rioting in the course of which grievous hurt was caused to two persons and death to a third. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate framed charges under Ss. 147 and 325 read with S. 149, I. P. Code, against all of them and also framed an additional charge under S. 435, I. P. Code, against one of them. He did not, however, frame charge under S. 302 or even under S. 304, read with S. 149, I. P. Code, on the ground that the accused who had struck the fatal blow and killed the deceased was absconding. He tried the accused and acquitted them holding that no clear case had been made out.

Held, that the absence of the accused who dealt the fatal blow causing death was no justification for his failure to frame a charge against the accused under S. 302, I. P. It is not proper in the case of a poor peasant, to add to a very long term of substantive imprisonment a fine which there is no reasonable prospect of the accused man paying and for default in paying which he will have to undergo a yet further term of imprisonment. It becomes all the more undesirable to impose such a fine where the term of imprisonment to be undergone in default will bring the aggregate sentence of imprisonment to more than the maximum term of imprisonment sanctioned by the particular section under which he is convicted. Judges should exercise a careful discretion in the matter of super-imposing fines upon long substantive terms of imprisonment. (Braund, J.) EMPEROR v. MEHDI ALI. 195 I.C. 599 = 1941 O A. ———Local custom—Antiquity—Extent to be established.

It is undoubted that a custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district the force of law. It must be ancient; but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man—still less that it is ancient in the English technical sense. It will depend upon the circumstance of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district. To require that in every case the antiquity of a custom must be carried back to a period which is beyond the memory of man, would only create great perplexity in the ———Proof—Mode of—Family and local customs—Duty of Court.

When a custom is pleaded by a party to a suit, the first thing which the Courts must ascertain is as to what kind of custom is pleaded. A custom set up must be definite so that its application in any given instance may be clear and certain and reasonable. Hindu customs are usually grouped under the heads of Kulachar (family customs) and Desachar (local customs). Where a family custom is set up the evidence is to be confined to the instances relating to the family of the parties but where a local custom is set up instances may be given not only relating to the members of the family but also instances relating to cases of all people residing within the locality. In the former case, unlike in the latter, instances relating to other castes living in the local area would not be admissible in evidence in proof of the custom. ———Proof of existence up to date of suit—Necessity.

Where a claim is based on custom, before it can be entertained it must be proved that the custom still exists and not merely that it existed at some past distance of time. An entry in the wajib-ul-arz is evidence of the existence of custom, but it is not conclusive. Nor can it be presumed that because it existed some long time back it still continues to exist. A custom is not a statutory creation but comes into being of its own accord and in the same manner can disappear of its own accord. Hence before it can be relied upon it must be shown in every case that it still prevails at the time of the filing of the suit and is a living one. (*Harper, S. M. and Sathe, J. ———Proof of—Wajib-ul-arz—Value of entries in—Instances of judicial recognition.

A wajib-ul-arz when properly used affords most valuable evidence of custom. The best evidence to prove a custom besides a wajib-ul-arz is of instances in which it is recognized by Courts. The reasonableness of a custom is primarily a question of fact and when a custom has been recognized by Courts of law on various occasions and has been followed ——Validity—Essentials.

The legal title to recognition of a special custom depends upon its antiquity, certainty and uniformity, and the Court must be assured of these conditions by means of clear and unambiguous evidence. A custom to be valid must be consciously accepted as having the force of law. Even if a custom is established by evidence, such custom, if unreasonable, will not be enforced by Courts. For the purpose of determining whether a custom is against reason or not, we are to judge not by the reason of an unlearned man, but by artificial and legal reason warranted by authority of law. DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—Merger—Creditor succeeding to estate of debtor—Effect—Claim by other creditors—Right of retainer of heir—Principle—Applicability to Hindu Law—Widow obtaining decree against brother—Death of latter and widow becoming heir—Right to claim rateable distribution as against another creditor.

Where a Hindu heir to whom the deceased was indebted succeeds to his property, only the net balance after the deduction of such a debt is taken by the heir. This principle of retainer is not a peculiarity of English law. It is founded on a general principle of jurisprudence, namely, where it is the same hand that has to receive and pay, he cannot sue himself, and the law must infer satisfaction of the debt on the ground that the debt must be deemed to have been paid from and out of the assets in the hands of the representative whether he be the executor or heir. The fact that he is a limited owner, such a Hindu widow, would not make any difference in the application of the principle. There is no reason why it should not be applied to the case of property vesting in an heir. So much of the property as is available in his hands must be deemed to have been appropriated and only the net balance of the estate must be deemed to have vested in him. So that if any other creditor brings a claim for his debt he would be entitled to assert the right of retainer and plead that the creditor can only claim payment from and out of the balance of the assets in his hands after deduction of his debt. There is nothing in the Hindu Law which precludes the application of this principle. The appellant, a Hindu widow, obtained a decree against R, her brother. She had obtained attachment of his property, before judgment and had also applied for execution. R died and subsequently the respondent obtained a decree against the appellant as the legal representative of R in respect of a debt due by him, the appellant having succeeded to the property of R. Respondent attached R's property in execution of his decree and had it put up for sale. Appellant applied for rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under S. 73 of the C. P. Code. It was pleaded that there was a total merger of her decree when she became R's heir and there was no decree in respect of which she could claim rateable distribution.

Held, (1) that the appellant's claim to rateable distribution was justified and maintainable, although it was open to her under S. 47 to prefer the claim that the amount due to her under her debt should be paid first out of the sale proceeds and the balance only should be available for the respondent's decree; (2) that before rateable distribution could be ordered, an enquiry was necessary for ascertaining whether R had left any other estate besides the property attached and sold, and if it be found that there were assets of R which would cover the value of the appellant's debt to that extent it must be deemed to be satisfied and she could claim rateable distribution only for the balance; if there were no other assets of R, the appellant was entitled to participate in the sale proceeds along with the respondent. In the case of a deed such as a lease, the question as to what has been demised turns upon the true construction of the lease. What the Court has to see is what are the operative provisions of the deed and what is actually granted by those operative portions. The proposition, that where the area goes against the boundaries the boundaries should prevail, cannot be accepted as a universal rule. The boundaries given in the schedule to the document cannot control the operative portion in the body of the document when they are merely descriptive. Documents of title are to be construed in accordance with their own terms when the property dealt with under the deed has been the subject of more than one transaction, the prior transactions cannot be regarded as controlling the construction of the later document, but can be referred to if they lend some independent corroboration of the view which the Court may take on a construction of the document itself. —Lessee to remain in possession for fixed term—Provision for payment of rent at fixed rate after term in case lessee wished to retain premises—Mortgage or lease.

There is no question of property being held in mortgage unless it is held as security for the debt, and to constitute a mortgage there must also be provision, express or implied, for a right of redemption. A document which is a kabuliyat with a provision for payment of rent in advance in a lump sum, and which provides for the lessee remaining in possession for a fixed period of years in consideration of the advance paid, and for payment of a rent at fixed rate after the period fixed if the lessee wished to retain the premises after the period, can in no sense be described as a mortgage of any sort. It is merely a lease, and the lessee is in possession only as a tenant and not as a mortgagee, there being no provision whereby the property is held as security for debt and no provision at all for redemption. Where by a deed of partition equal shares were given to the two sons of the proprietor and an area of 125 bighas was reserved to the wife for maintenance, it was held that as there were no words in the deed to show that the grant to the wife was a grant for life, and as there was no restriction on alienation on her part and no provision for its ultimate devolution on her death, the interest created was not merely a life interest. It was further held that the deed could not be construed to mean as a transfer of 125 bighas in favour of the sons subject to a charge of maintenance and as the intention was to keep this land as separate and distinct from the proprietary share it did not on the death of the lady merge in the proprietary share and pass to the holder of it but devolved upon her heirs. An alteration in a material part of a written contract made by a party thereto without the consent of the other party makes the contract void to this extent, that the party responsible for the alteration cannot enforce the contract against a party not responsible. The avoidance operates as from the time of alteration so as to prevent the person who has made the alteration from putting the contract in suit to enforce against the other party any promise thereby made. An agreement in the contract to submit all disputes to arbitration is such a promise and it is, therefore, not enforcible from the time of the alteration of the contract against the party not responsible for it. Offences under R. 6 (5) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939, may obviously differ very much in their gravity, and they cannot be dealt with by any rule of thumb sentence. If there is any reason for supposing that a man has entered a prohibited area with a view to obtaining information which might be useful to the enemy, he would deserve a severe sentence. Again, if a man has entered a prohibited area knowing full well that it is prohibited having climbed over a fence or eluded a sentry or done something of that sort, he would deserve a more severe sentence than a man who has entered a prohibited area without appreciating that it is a prohibited area; but a man who enters a prohibited area inadvertently should be dealt with more leniently. Sentencing first offenders for offences of this type to a term of imprisonment would only be a very good way of manufacturing criminals for the future, though it cannot be laid down as a general rule that sentences of imprisonment shall not be imposed in the case of these offences. ——Rules under Rr. 34 (6) 'K. and P.), 38 (5) and 121—Stages in the commission of an offence generally—Communication to Magistrate of intention to shout anti-war slogan—If an offence.

There are four stages ordinarily in the commission of an offence, namely intention, preparation, attempt and the final act constituting the offence. Intention per se is not ordinarily punishable at all. Preparation is punishable in rare cases as for example, S. 399 of I. P. Code. Attempt is punishable in a large majority of cases while the final act constituting the offence is always punishable. Preparation consists in devising or arranging the means or measure for the commission of an offence. The mere communication of a letter to the District Magistrate containing an intention on the part of the writer to shout anti-war slogans at a particular place on a particular day is not an offence under R. 121 read with Rr. 38 (5) and 34 (6) (K. and P.). Intention is not to be confused with preparation. The communication of the letter does not come under preparation because it does not in any way devise or arrange any means or measure for the commission of the offence, that is, the shouting of the slogan. The intent on to shout the slogan might be given up at any time before the offence is actually committed. Hence mere expression of an intention is not an offence. Money up to the limit permitted cannot be seized but must be refunded to the searched person. The excess found has, under R. 90-B (6), to be disposed of in such manner as the Central Government may direct The money properly seized never becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the Court by which the person searched is tried for his offence, and the Court has no jurisdiction to make any order as to the disposal of such money. R. 90 B (6) prevails over S. 517, Cr. P. Code, in view of S. 3 of the Defence of India Act. The Court has only jurisdiction to determine whether property has been rightly seized under R. 90-B (4) ; but if it comes to the conclusion that the property was rightly seized, it has no jurisdiction to make any order as to its disposal. Rule 121 of the Defence of India Rules does not make mere intention to contravene any of the provisions of the Rules punishable. It makes attempt abetment, and acts preparatory to the contravention of the rules punishable, but not mere intention to contravene them. The act preparatory to the contravention of the rules, is presumably one that prepares the way (i.e.) facilitates the contravention of the rules, in some manner or other and not merely an act which precedes the contravention of the rules, but does not facilitate the contravention in any way. The mere sending of a letter by a person to the District Magistrate intimating that he intended to shout anti-war slogans does not constitute an act "preparatory to" the contravention of rules framed under the Defence of India Act, within the meaning of Rule 121 and is not an offence punishable under that rule. ——Rules under R. 130-A (b)—Scope—If ultra vires—Offences under the Act—Bail—Right of accused to be released on bail—Cr. P. Code—Applicability.

R. 130 A, Cl. (b) of the rules framed under the Defence of India Act of 1939 is ultra vires the Central Government. A power given to make rules with regard to arrest and trial by S. 2 (3)(1) of the Act, implies a power to make rules for the custody of persons pending trial even apart from the general power conferred by S. 2 (1). Hence no person accused of an offence under the Defence of India Act or the rules there under can be released on bail unless the Court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is innocent. In respect of offences, under the Defence of India Act, that Act governs all other statutory provi-ions and therefore the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code with regard to bail do not apply. The trial of such offences is governed by the special rules under the Act. though the offences are now tried in the ordinary Criminal Courts and not by special tribunals. A person, in order to claim the status of an agriculturist, must prove that he ordinarily engaged personally in agricultural labour, that is, he was regularly and habitually cultivating his fields. S. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act must be read literally, and it must be held that where there is not a single order for attachment and sale, but there is an order for attachment alone intended to be followed by an order for sale, it is open to the judgment-debtor to set up his status of an agriculturist both when an order for attachment is sought and also subsequently on the application for an order for sale. A decision adverse to the judgment-debtor on his plea of being an agriculturist raised at the time of the order for attachment does not preclude him from raising the question again at time of the order for sale. DISSOLUTION OF MUSLIM MARRIAGES ACT (1939), S. 2 (ii)—Failure to maintain—If must be wilful.

There is nothing in the wording of S. 2 (ii) to suggest that the failure to maintain the wife must be wilful. Divorce can be granted on grounds which do not necessarily involve any deliberate default on the part of the husband. It is absolutely immaterial whether the failure to maintain is due to poverty, failing health, loss of work, imprisonment or to any other cause whatsoever. (Beckett, J.) MANAK KHAN v. MT. —— S. 2 (ii)—Retrospective effect.

When an Act is intended to provide a remedy for what is considered to be an existing unsatisfactory state of affairs, the intention is clearly that the remedy should be applied even though this may involve giving retrospective effect to some of its provisions. Consequently, S. 2 (ii) must be taken as intended to apply with retrospective effect. (Beckett, J.) MANAK KHAN v. MT. MULKHAN BANO. 194 I C. 567 = 14 R.L. 1 = A.I R. 1941 Lah. 167.

The expression "High Court" as used in S. 8 of the Divorce Act does not mean either the original or the appellate side of the High Court, but means the High Court as one whole. But the litigant, when he wants to have an order under that section, would have to approach that particular department of the High Court which is empowered to deal with this matter by its rules framed under S. 13 of Act 24 and 25, Vict., Chap. 104, which is substantially repeated in S. 108 of the Government of India Act, 1919 and S. 223 of the Government of India Act, 1935. Evidence in divorce proceedings to prove the case of the petitioner must be confined to the pleas set out in the petition. EASEMENT—Acquisition—Compromise conferring right to construct bundh on another's land—Easement to maintain bundh—Right to repair bundh—If acquired.

Where a compromise confers upon the defendant a right to construct a bundh on the plaintiff's land the defendant cannot set up adverse possession with regard to the land and can claim nothing more than a right of easement to maintain a bundh on the land. The right to repair the bundh must be presumed in defendant's favour, such right being incidental to the existence of the bundh. ——Ss. 5, 15 and 47—Right of repairs—If extinguished by non-user for two years prior to suit.

——S. 7 (b)—Right to discharge surface water on land at lower level—Nature of—Such right, if may be extinguished—Change in original disposition of lands—Effect of.

It is now well settled that the right of an upper landowner to throw his surface water on to land at a lower level is a natural right, and not in the strict sense of the word an easement. In other words, it is a right which is not acquired, but is an incident of property owing its origin to the disposition and arrangements of nature. It is incapable, therefore, of being lost by non-user or extinguished permanently, and the maxim "tantum prescriptum quantum possessium" has no application. But these natural rights and liabilities may be altered by contract or grant, express or implied, as well as by enjoyment of an adverse easement obstructing the flow of the water from the higher to the lower ground. It follows, therefore, that if any artificial alteration is made in the configuration or disposition of the lands or any conditions are otherwise created affecting the exercise by the upper owner of his natural right to discharge his surface water to the lower level such as by excavating a khal or channel between the two tenements then this fact alone will not be sufficient to determine whether the natural right is thereby merely suspended for the time being or finally extinguished. The purposes for which, and the circumstances in which, the altered conditions are brought into existence as well as the subsequent mode of user or enjoyment will all have to be looked into. If, for instance, the khal appears to be only an arrangement made by the 'servient' owner in his own land for the reception of the waters coming from above, this will not in fact constitute even a temporary interruption of the natural right, but will really be one mode of submitting to the exercise of such right. If, on the other hand, it should appear that the khal has been excavated by the "dominant" owner with the express idea of relieving the lower land of the burden which rests on it by virtue of its natural position, this may well be regarded as a permanent abandonment of the natural right, and there can accordingly be no question of its revival at a later stage, merely because the khal no longer serves as a proper means of drainage. It may also well be that though there is no express abandonment, still an abandonment may be inferred from the fact of long and continuous interruption of the natural right caused by the khal and submitted to by the dominant owner. The facts may, again, show that the khal is only such interruption of the natural right on the part of the owner of the servient land as to constitute no more than an adverse easement in which case of course the natural right merely remains suspended so long as the easement remains operative by actual enjoyment. Where in addition to the khal the servient owner takes other measures, such as putting up a bund or embankment, to obstruct the flow of the water from the higher level to his land, the adverse enjoyment may easily be supposed to continue even after the khal is silted up. ——S. 13 (d)—Common ownership— Subsequent transfer—Transferor's right to irrigate his field from the fields transferred—Nature of easement.

The scheme of S. 13, Easements Act, is perfectly clear. It provides for six different situations which may arise where one person transfers or bequeaths immovable property. Cls. (c) and (d) deal with the effect on the transferor's rights. The dominant heritage is only entitled to the quasi-easements if they are apparent and continuous, where property was originally in the ownership of two brothers and after partition one of the brothers sells certain of his plots to another and the latter obstructs, the irrigation of the transferor's lands from the lands transferred, the transferor can claim such a right even though the deed of transfer is silent on the point. The easement claimed is an apparent and continuous easement and it must be deemed to have been reserved by the transferor when he parted with the other fields. ——S. 15—Lessor and lessee—Acquisition of right by lessee as against lessor.

It is true that a lessee of land cannot acquire a right of way or any other easement over land owned by his lessor as having been peaceably and openly enjoyed by a person claiming title thereto and of right within the meaning of the third clause of S. 15 of the Easements Act; in such a case the tenant's occupation is in the sight of the law that of his landlord. But where a lessee of land owns a building built upon land leased to him, he may, so far as the use of light and air or support for his building is concerned, acquire rights of easement in respect of such light, air or support under Cls. (1) and (2) of S. 15, and these rights cannot be objected to as being incapable of being acquired by him on behalf of his lessor as well as against him, for those rights are acquired by him for himself, and for none other than himself, as owner of the building. ——S. 15 (3)—"Claiming title thereto"—Construction.

The words "claiming title thereto" in the third clause of S. 15 of the Easements Act cannot be interpreted merely as referring to the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, claiming a title to an easement in the litigation going on. These words were not introduced by accident to the third clause of S. 15, and they are not a meaningless addition to it. They indicate a very important requirement to make prescription for such easements as come within that clause effective. Under that clause it is not sufficient for the purpose of prescribing for the easements covered by the clause that they should have been enjoyed with a dominant tenement as an easement without interruption and for twenty years. They must have been enjoyed openly and by persons claiming title to them as easements and as of right. (Reilly, C.J. and Subramanya Aiyar, J.) RAMAMURTHI v. NARASAMMA.

Where drain water has been passing through a drain over another's lands and from there on to the public way, from the putting up of a pipe in a well in the dominant owner's land, it could not be inferred as a matter of law that there has been so much increase in the burden of easement as to destroy the easement. ——S. 33—Burden of proof—Action for infringement—What plaintiff has to prove.

easement has not to be measured by the amount of light and air that had been enjoyed. There is no infringement unless that which has been done amounts to a nuisance. A finding that the place still remained a well lighted and well ventilated place, in spite of the alleged infringement, would be fatal to the plaintiff's case, as under S. 33 of the Easements Act the plaintiff cannot succeed in a suit for disturbance of an easement unless he proves substantial damage. The quantity of light to which a right can be acquired is what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitance or business of the tenement according to ordinary notions. In order to establish substantial damage under S. 33 of the Easements Act, the plaintiff must prove material diminution in the value of his heritage or material interference with his physical comfort which can be ascribed to the interruption of the free passage of light and air. The state of the property at the time of the alleged disturbance of the easement has to be looked to. not as it was before, or as it might be at a future date. The plaintiff cannot claim that sources of light and air alleged to be liable to obstruction at a later date, should be excluded from consideration. (*Davis, C. ——S. 46—Owners of dominant tenement acquiring right of co-sharer in servient tenement—Easement, if extinguished.

Before there can be any extinguishment of an easement, there must be a merger of the servient and dominant tenements so as to result in the single ownership of both. Where the owner of the dominant tenement acquires the right of a co-sharer in the servient tenement, the ownership of the two tenements does not merge into one and therefore there is no extinguishment but merely a suspension of the easement (right of way) which can revive after a partition decree. R. 48 of the Indian Electricity Rules, 1937, introduced by the Notification dated 27 3 1937, did not come into force until 22 3-1938; and R. 48 cannot therefore apply to any installation works carried out before 22 3 1938, and after March 1937. Nor would the old R. 40-A of the Electricity Rules, 1922, apply, because under the Notification of 23-3-1937, the old R. 40-A was superseded when the new rules were made applicable on 27-3-1937. S. 24 of the General Clauses Act of 1897 is of no avail in such a case and R. 40-A of the old rule cannot be regarded as superseded only when the new R. 48 came into force, because the notification of March, 1937, expressly superseded the rules of 1922. Further S. 24 of the General Clauses Act would come into operation where a Central Act or Regulation has been repealed and re-enacted, and neither a Central Act nor a Regulation would include a rule made under an Act. A statement must consist of words, whether they be spoken, or written, or spelled out as would be done by a mute person on his fingers; and words would not always be statements. Acts however exclude words and cannot be translated into words. So where an accused takes certain articles belonging to the deceased from various places and hands them over to the police, cannot be said to be making a statement much less making a statement amounting to a confession. It cannot be said that Ss. 18 to 21 of the Evidence Act do not apply to admissions in criminal cases. The illustrations given apply to criminal cases, and there is nothing in the sections to suggest that they apply to civil cases and civil cases only. Incriminating statements made by an accused under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, though not admissible as confessions in evidence will not necessarily be excluded. They may be admitted as admissions against interest under Ss. 18 to 21 of the Evidence Act. The fact that the statement is not a full confession but is only a partial confession or something less than a confession or is of a self-exculpatory nature cannot be made a ground for excluding it either from evidence or from consideration. It is true that extra-judicial confessions are to be regarded with caution, but it does not follow that they are always to be rejected. They may be made in such circumstances as to have no reasonable doubt as to their truth. (Davis, C. J. and Weston, J.) MAHOMED BAKHSH BAGO v. EMPEROR.

Held, that the statements which were of a confessional nature and which were made in answer to a direct inducement, namely, a promise that nothing would happen to them if they produced the sticks and knives which were used, were not receivable in evidence by reason of S. 24 of the Evidence Act; the fact that they were true statements could not make them admissible, because the statement being excluded under S. 24, their truth could not be the subject of inquiry.

Although it is not illegal to act upon a retracted confession so far as the maker thereof is concerned provided the Court believes it to be true, it is generally unsafe as a rule of prudence to rely upon a retracted confession made by an accused unless it is corroborated in material particulars so as to satisfy the Court that the confession may be acted upon. ——S. 25—Construction and scope—Trial on charge of murder—Confession to police of offence of culpable homicide—Admissibility in evidence against accused.

The prohibition contained in S. 25 of the Evidence Act is of a general nature. It forbids the proof at a trial of a criminal offence of any admission of any offence made by the accused to a police officer, and it makes no difference whether the offence is one of which the accused can be convicted at the trial at which it is sought to prove the confession made to a police officer. The admissibility of a confession does not depend upon the offence charged. A confession made by an accused to the police of an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder is not admissible in a trial for murder on the same facts. ——S. 30—Retracted confession of co-accused—Value of.

The very existence of S. 30 of the Evidence Act postulates that a confession of a co-accused may be used in cases where the evidence afforded and some such evidence there must be—lacks the requisite volume and certainty to insure conviction. It is wrong to state that when a confession is retracted, it has no value at all as against the co-accused. The retraction of a confession may throw doubt either on the truth of it or on the fact that it was voluntarily made, but it certainly does not follow because a confession is retracted that it was either untrue or involuntary, and the truth or voluntariness of a confession operates equally—where a confession is self-inculpatory—in respect of the person who made it and the person implicated therein. There is no reason to hold that merely because a confession has been retracted in the Court of Session, it was involuntarily made. The motive for making a self-inculpatory confession is the very simple one of an expectation of leniency in the matter of sentence and where a number of people are jointly tried and some have made confession to a Magistrate before the trial and some have not, it is again not unnatural that persons who have made confessions should retract them under pressure and persuasion by their fellows who have not confessed. Retracted confessions must no doubt be used with caution but when it is possible to come to the conclusion that the confessions cannot be otherwise than true, they may be taken into consideration in connection with the evidence appearing in the case, whether they are retracted or not (Grille, J.) ABDUL GAFOOR, In re.

A dying declaration which names only one person, where the killing took place under circumstances where there could be no doubt that the dying man identified his assailant, is the very strongest possible form of evidence. ——Ss. 32 and 33—Relative scope of.

Ss. 32 and 33, Evidence Act, give different instances where evidence is relevant. S. 32 makes relevant statements by a deceased person as to the cause of his death ; S. 33 makes relevant evidence given by a witness when the witness is dead or cannot be found, etc. These are two distinct cases. ——S. 32 (1)—Dying declaration—If can be acted-on—Duty of Court.

It is, no doubt, improbable that a man who has been stabbed and has been able to recognize his assailant would omit to name the actual assailant and instead give the name of some other person. But in cases where the assailant has not been recognized, the Court must not ignore the possible temptation that there may be, if one has grounds for suspecting any person, to name that person as having been actually and positively identified. The danger of this kind of wrong identification has to be borne in mind in dealing with what are called dying declarations. There is no absolute rule that a dying declaration should not be acted on for the purpose of convicting an accused person even if uncorroborated provided that the Court is fully satisfied that it is true. But before so acting on it the Court will apply to it every test of its genuineness and good faith which it is possible in the circumstances of the case to apply. Special caution is needed in dealing with a dying declaration when the prosecution evidence shows signs of attempt to improve and develop it at successive stages, or when there is serious room for doubt as to whether the contents of the dying statement include matter suggested to the deceased by the outsiders. In 1874, a suit was filed in the High Court of Madras by a Mahomedan on behalf of himself and other members of the Mahomedan community of the locality where the mosque was situate against G. H. for removing him from the office of superintendent, alleging that he had wrongfully alienated the properties belonging to the trust. The suit was compromised, and the decree which was passed in accordance with the compromise declared that certain properties belonged to the mosque. The area of these properties was defined. In 1935 the trustees of the mosque brought a suit for redemption of properties which fell within the area of the properties dealt with in the earlier compromise decree. The compromise decree in the suit of 1874 was sought to be relied on in proof of the title of the mosque to the properties in suit.

Held, that G. H., being dead, and the compromise decree being in effect a statement by him that these properties belonged to the mosque, a statement against G. H's proprietary interest, the decree was admissible in evidence under S. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act to establish the title of the mosque, though the statement could not affect the interests of the mortgagee or his successors in interest. Where the question at issue is whether a certain person died issueless, a statement of a deceased that that person died issueless amounts to a statement relating to the existence of a relationship by blood, because the question whether that person left a son involves the question whether there is any blood relationship between him and the person who claims to be his son. The existence of any relationship within the meaning of S. 32 (5) of the Evidence Act includes the non-existence of such relationship. If a statement relating to the existence of such relationship is evidence under that sub-section, any statement which implies that there is no existence of such relationship between two persons also comes under that sub-section. ——S. 34—Construction—Books of account—Entries in—Proof of correctness and of books being kept in regular course of business—Sufficiency—Corroboration—Necessity for.

S. 34 of the Evidence Act cannot be read as meaning that there should be independent evidence, besides the entries in books of account, that such and such articles valued at such and such amount were supplied on such and such date. What is necessary to be seen in each case is whether besides the entries in the account books, there is any evidence to prove that the transactions referred to in the entries actually took place. In the case of transactions which are numerous and which extend over some length of time it is not reasonable to expect independent evidence to be given to prove each and every particular transaction. In such a case the genuineness of the account books, if they are regularly kept in the course of business, will be the determining factor. But mere proof of the correctness of the entries in the account books would not be enough. There must be some evidence to corroborate those entries. The evidence of the person who wrote the account books and in whose presence the transactions took place would be the best corroboration. Since he cannot possibly have independent recollection of the various transactions, he may, as provided in S. 159 of the Evidence Act, refresh his memory by referring to the account books. But, it is not necessary for him to prove that such and such articles valued at specific amounts were supplied on specified dates. If he proves the entries written by him and states that the transactions referred to in those entries actually took place in his presence or to his knowledge, the effect would be the same. Where however, the dispute between the parties is confined to some particular items only, specific evidence may be available and should be insisted upon to prove those particular transactions. Mere general evidence to prove that the account books were regularly kept is not enough. ——S. 92—Mortgage—Stipulation that payment should be proved only by endorsements on bond—Payment evidenced by receipt—If can be proved.

There was a stipulation in a mortgage-bond to this effect: "When I shall pay any kist I shall get the payment endorsed on the back of the bond. Except such endorsement on the back of the bond any other receipt or oral or documentary evidence regarding payment will not be entertainable in Court and will be null and void." The mortgagor made a payment which was not endorsed on the bond, but the payment was evidenced by a receipt signed by the mortgagee.

Held, that although it was open to the mortgagee to refuse to appropriate towards the mortgage-debt any payment which might be made by his debtor and not endorsed on the mortgage bond, the condition that he need not appropriate it to the mortgage debt had on the face of the receipt been waived by him for the receipt clearly showed that he had in fact appropriated the payment to the mortgage-debt, notwithstanding that he had in the bond reserved himself power not to do so.

Held also, that the undertaking given by the mortgagor that he should not offer any other evidence of payment except endorsements on the bond and that if he did, the Court should not receive it, was not binding upon the Court which was not a party to the undertaking, and that if evidence was tendered what the Court was to see was whether it was admissible under the Evidence Act and not whether in tendering it some breach of contract had been committed, and that in tendering it the mortgagor had committed a breach of his undertaking. The mortgagee's remedy was to sue for damages for the breach. (Rowland, J.) SAGO RAI v. RAMJEE SINGH. 196 I.C. 645 = 14 R.P. 220 = 8 B.R. 70.

——Ss. 102 and 105—Scope of burden of proof on the prosecution and accused.

(Per Iqbal Ahmad, C.J.).—The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the 'exception' or 'proviso' is no doubt cast on the accused by S. 105, Evidence Act, but this does not in any way absolve the prosecution of the burden laid on it by S. 102. The burden of proof, so far as the entire 'proceeding' is concerned, remains on the prosecution, even though the burden of the 'fact in issue' pleaded by the accused is cast upon him. Hence it is manifest that even in cases to which S. 105 applies the prosecution has to prove the guilt of the accused. ——S. 105—Effect on the onus of the Crown.

Per Collister, J.—The onus is certainly on the Crown to prove all the facts which constitute the elements of the offence, and if there is any reasonable doubt left in the mind of the Court as to whether these facts have been established the accused person is entitled to the benefit thereof; but this general onus is subject by statute, to the special onus which S. 105, Evidence Act imposes on the accused person, and when the Legislature has enacted specific provisions in the Evidence Act as to what amounts to proof or disproof, the Court will not be justified in falling back upon the general principle that the Crown must prove the prisoner's guilt. So far as Courts in India are conserned, the law of evidence is embodied in the Evidence Act and the Courts in India are strictly bound by its provisions when considering the question of onus of proof and its discharge. ——S. 105—Plea of self-defence—Burden of proof—Statement of accused—When can be acted on.

Per Young, C.J.—There appears in some quarters to be the opinion that where an accused person has admitted participation in a fight, in which one of the other party is killed or injured, but pleads that he acted in the exercise of the right of self-defence, it lies heavily upon him under all circumstances to prove under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the facts necessary to establish his plea. It must be remembered that in the vast majority of such cases in this country the accused persons are usually the only persons who could appear as witnesses in their own self-defence and they are barred from doing so by the law of procedure. The Courts, therefore, must be prepared to take their statements into consideration. In a case where the prosecution evidence is wholly unreliable and there is no other evidence to suggest that that part of their statements in which they put forward the plea of self-defence, is not correct, the Court has no other alternative but to accept their statements and act upon them. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 114.

Though it may be proved that a person was born before the rukhsati and that the conduct of the parents was such as to throw doubts on his legitimacy, that would not be sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the fact of the birth of the person concerned during the continuance of a valid marriage between the parents. In proceedings under S. 488, Cr. P. ——S. 112—Scope—Rebuttal of presumption of legitimacy—What amounts to—Burden of proof of non-access—Evidence Act, S 35.

The effect of S. 112 of the Evidence Act is that where a child is born during lawful wedlock, that child will have to be assumed to be the child of the man who was at the time the husband of the mother, unless it is shown that they had no opportunity of sexual intercourse in consequence of which the child could have been begotten. Every assumption is to be made in favour of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, and the onus of proving non-access or illegitimacy is on the party alleging the same. The law requires in such cases the positive proof of a negative fact, that is, non-access as between the parties to the marriage, and the mere fact that they are living separately in two different houses is insufficient to establish non-access. The fact of non-access has to be proved like any other physical fact and may be established both by direct and circumstantial evidence of an unambiguous character, but unless such evidence is forthcoming, it will not be possible for any Court "to believe it to be probable that there was no access." An entry in the birth register containing the name of the mother only does not warrant the inference that the child born is not illegitimate. An entry in the birth register may be relevant under S. 35 of the Evidence Act to show the date of birth, but the question as to how far the fact that the name of the mother and not that of the father was given by the informant would bear on the question of the child's legitimacy, even if it is assumed to be relevant, depends largely on the means the informant may be shown to have possessed of the knowledge in connection with the child's birth. If the informant is a stranger, who did not know the father, the statement, even if relevant, would be wholly unimportant, and the entry would be of no value when the informant is not examined and no explanation is given for his non-examination by the party relying on the entry in support of his plea of illegitimacy. The onus in a criminal case always rests on the prosecution and never shifts on to the accused. Before raising a presumption of guilt under S. 114 (a) of the Evidence Act the jury or the Court, will be entitled to take into consideration the explanation of the accused in defence, whether supported by evidence or not and to find out for itself whether the explanation given by the accused even though not believed in its entirety, is such as to raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of the jury or the Court as to the guilt of the accused. ——S. 114, Ill. (a)—Presumption—When to be drawn—Duty of Court—Old brass bell stolen in Bombay city found with accused thirteen days after theft—Presumption—If can be drawn.

The question as to what period is covered by the expression "soon after" in Ill. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act must vary according to the circumstances of each case. The Court is not bound to draw this presumption and the Court must always ask itself whether in the circumstances of a particular case the presumption is one which in fairness to the accused can be drawn. In the case of property of some value, where it is very unlikely that the man from whom the accused got it had come by it honestly, or in the case of property stolen in a village where there are not likely to be many dealings in it, the presumption may be drawn more readily than in the case of a theft in a big and prominent city of a common article like an old brass bell.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 114.

Where an old bell stolen in the city of Bombay was found with the accused thirteen days after the theft, it would not be right to presume that the accused knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen merely on the ground that he was shown to be in possession of it thirteen days after the theft. ——S. 114, Ill. (b)—Accomplice—Value of evidence of.

Though Ill. (b) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act provides that a Court 'may' presume that the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of credit. unless corroborated the word 'may' is not 'must.' Therefore in spite of all that has been said to the contrary in law, the evidence of an accomplice stands on the same footing as any other evidence. The Court is not obliged to hold that he is unworthy of credit and must be corroborated. It is for the Court to consider after taking into consideration all the circumstances, one of which being that he is an accomplice, whether it does or does not rely on the evidence. To entirely rule out the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice might in many cases lead to miscarriage of justice. (Thomas, C.J.) JAGDISH NARAIN v. EMPEROR. 1941 A.W.R. ——S. 115—Consent decree—Estoppel—Test.

The test for determining whether there is an estoppel in any particular case in consequence of a decree passed on a compromise must depend upon the answer to the question "Did the parties decide for themselves the particular matter in dispute by the compromise and was the matter expressly embodied in the decree of the Court passed on the compromise or was it necessarily involved in, or was it the basis of, what was embodied in the decree"? 35 Mad. 75, Rel. on. A bond was payable in ten annual instalments. The plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of certain sum when two instalments remained unpaid. This suit was compromised and the parties came to an agreement that a decree for the two instalments should be passed, but that no further claim should be made by the plaintiff without going into the accounts relating to the balance. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff it was pleaded by the defendant inter alia that full consideration for the bond had not been paid:

Held, that the compromise decree in the previous suit could not be considered to be tantamount to an admission that full consideration had been paid for the bond. Hence the consent decree in the previous suit was not a bar to the pleas raised by the defendant in the subsequent suit. (Bhide, J.) ATA MOHAMMAD v. LACHHMAN DAS.

—— S. 115—Essentials of estoppel—Plea of a particular status based on a document—If can operate as an estoppel.

Under S. 115, Evidence Act, a person is estopped only when he has by his declaration or act intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief. If a person in suit claims a certain status on the strength of the interpretation put by him on a certain document, he cannot be said to have led the other party to believe a thing or act on its belief, for it was open to the latter to examine the document and to decide for himself whether the interpretation put by the opposite party was correct or not. The action of the defendants in resisting various suits and applications filed by the plaintiff against them in Revenue Courts on the ground that a particular document was a mortgage and not a theka, cannot operate as an admission or as an estoppel against those defendants in subsequent suits. In order that an estoppel can be raised under the provisions of S. 115, Evidence Act, the representation must be a representation of fact and not of law; and also there can be no estoppel against the provisions of a statute. They can only show that the title had ceased after the mortgage. This doctrine of estoppel has for its basis the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee and is based on the principle that one who derives a benefit from the other cannot deny the other's title. There is no scope for the application of the doctrine to a case where the mortgagor takes up the position that he is not the mortgagor, the executant of the mortgage deed not having authority to sign on his behalf, and the mortgagee accepts that position. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 135.

A tenant cannot be permitted to show that in granting him the lease, the landlord acted as agent of another person who was the real owner, and that the liability to pay rent to the lessor cannot be discharged by payment to that alleged owner. To so permit the tenant would be contrary to the rule of estoppel laid down in S. 116 of the Evidence Act. The plaintiff sued for recovery of rent payable under a registered Kadapa executed to him by the defendant It appeared that the property leased consisted partly of lands, belonging to the plaintiff and partly of lands belonging to his adoptive mother which were under his management. The Kadapa, however, recited that the property leased was in the absolute possession and enjoyment of the plaintiff, and it contained a covenant by the defendant to pay rent to the plaintiff. In defence to the claim the defendant pleaded that part of the rent had been paid to the plaintiff's adoptive mother who was the real owner of part of the property.

Held, that S. 116 of the Evidence Act estopped the defendant from denying that the plaintiff had title to the entire property demised under the lease or from pleading discharge by payment to the real owner. Where a party to a suit was present in Court when his witnesses were examined and later on claimed to be examined as a witness in support of a contention put forward by him and it was disallowed it was held that there was no doubt a practice to refuse to allow such a person to give evidence, but that there was no rule of the Court to that effect, nor was there any provision of law in the C. It was held further that S. 135 of the Evidence Act did not authorise a Court of law to refuse the examination of a witness who might have done something which was not very desirable. It was also held that the inherent powers of the Court were very wide and undefinable, but at the same time the exercise of such powers should not be made in an arbitrary and capricious manner. ——S. 138—Scope—Sessions trial—Tendering witness for cross-examination—Propriety of practice—Eye witness—Tendering of for cross examination—Legality.

To tender a witness for cross-examination in a Sessions trial is a very irregular course. The practice of tendering a witness for cross-examination is inconsistent with S. 138 of the Evidence Act. Such a course should, if at all, be adopted only in the cases of witnesses of secondary importance. Where the prosecution have already got sufficient evidence on a particular point, and do not want to waste time by examining a witness who was examined in the lower Court but at the same time do not want to deprive the accused of his right of cross-examining such witness, they tender him for cross-examination. But the witness should, strictly speaking, be asked by the prosecution, with the consent of the accused's pleader and the leave of the Court, whether his evidence in the lower Court is true. If he gives a general answer as to the truth of his evidence in the lower Court, he can be cross-examined on that. But he must in some way be examined-in-chief before he can be cross-examined. In any case the practice of tendering a witness for cross-examination certainly should not be employed in the case of an important witness. FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Requisites—Validity—Test—Duty of Courts.

FISHERY.

The essence of a family arrangement lies in an adjustment of conflicting claims bona fide made and recognized on both sides with the object of putting an end to the disputes. The true test is whether the parties had laid claim against each other and whether those claims had been settled by virtue of the agreement termed the 'family settlement.' The strength or validity of the claims of the parties has nothing to do with the validity of the settlement. It is not open to the Court to try to ascertain as to whether the claims of the parties to the family settlement were good and well founded and to test the validity of the settlement after having arrived at a finding upon the strength or otherwise of such claims. Where disputes arose between the son, daughter and brother of a deceased person with reference to the right to succeed to his property and the son and daughter with a view to end the disputes came to an agreement and had the property mutated in equal shares as between themselves it was held that the essential elements of a family settlement were fully established. S. 27 (1) is designed to prevent members being sued for slander or prosecuted for defamation, and perhaps also, from being prosecuted for sedition, in respect of a speech made in the House. The speaker's declaration that certain member's seat was vacant, although the declaration was made by words spoken in the chamber does not come within the purview of the sub-section. In making such declaration the speaker is doing more than merely giving a ruling on a point of order. He is therefore not protected either by S. 27 (1) or by S. 32 (2). Promulgation and publication in the Official Gazette are not synonymous. There is a distinction between the two. The Governor's functions are capable of being exercised in any of three different ways. Some are exercisable in his discretion which means that he need not ask for the aid or advice of his Ministers at all; a second group is exercisable, notwithstanding the advice of Ministers, in the exercise of his individual judgment; and a third group is exercisable under the guidance of his Ministers. Matters in the Government of Burma Act which are said to fall within the individual judgment of the Governor may fall within the second and third group according to the opinion formed by the Governor as to the course which he should take. Where therefore an ordinance issued is expressed to be under the powers conferred by S. 42 it is implied that an opinion has been formed by the Governor and an individual judgment has been exercised by him. powers. Sub-S. (4) of S. 42 makes it clear that the Court can go into the question whether any provision of an ordinance promulgated under S. 42 is or is not void, on the ground that such provision, if it had been enacted in an Act of the Legislature would not have been valid An ordinance providing that members of the House of the Representatives should not be disqualified for being members of the House if they held commissions in His Majesty's forces is not a matter of defence, but is concerned with something which is a matter entirely for the Ministers. ——S. 42—Ordinances—Preamble—Desirability.

It is not legally necessary that an ordinance should have a Preamble setting out that the Governor is satisfied as required by the terms of S. 42 (1), and also the purpose within S. 42 (1), for which the ordinance is promulgated. Legaliy all that is necessary is that the Governor should declare that he promulgates the ordinance under the provisions of S. 42 of the Act; but the adoption of this suggestion might make for the better understanding by the public of the reason and necessity for the issue of an ordinance. (Roberts, C.J. and Dunkley, J.) U LUN v. U CHIT HLAING. 1941 Rang. L.R. 101=193 I.C. 114=13 R.R. 228=9 F.L.J. (H.C.) 114=A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 49.

Promulgation of an ordinance without doubt connotes the fact of making the public aware of the existence of the new law. Promulgation of a new law takes place through the medium of the Official Gazette. It is wrong for the notifications which appear in the Burma Gazette when an ordinance is first published therein to say, as they do: "The Governor has promulgated the following ordinance"; they should say "The Governor hereby promulgates the following ordinance." An ordinance therefore is promulgated on the date on which it is published in the Gazette. (Sharpe, J.) U LUN v. U CHIT HLAING. 193 I.C. 91=13 R.R. 211=4 F.L.J. (H.C.) 8=A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 5.

——Ss. 99 and 100—Scope and effect of—Provincial Legislature—Power to affect prerogative rights of His Majesty—Decree or order of Privy Council—If affected by Madras Agriculturists Relief Act.

It is a well established principle that within the limits of subject and area assigned to a legislature by the Imperial Parliament, its powers to make laws are as supreme and plenary as those of Parliament itself. It is clearly competent for the Provincial Legislature to make laws affecting His Majesty's prerogative rights. The Legislative authority conferred by Ss. 99 and 100 of the Government of India Act of 1935 is subject only to "the provisions of this Act" and there is no provision in the Act which excepts generally the prerogative of the Crown. It is therefore within the competence of the Legislatures of India to make laws derogating from the prerogative rights of the Crown except of course in so far as such prerogatives may be comprised in matters specifically excepted. The prerogative has no concern with the curtailment or modification of the rights of parties by a local law, such as Madras Act IV of 1938, although such rights may have been ascertained and defined by an order of His Majesty in Council. It cannot therefore be held that the Madras Act IV of 1938 is invalid and inoperative so far as decree or orders of the Privy Council are concerned. S. 100 of the Government of India Act of 1935, when read in conjunction with the list in the seventh schedule, if it gives a Provincial Government power to legislate generally with respect to money-lending, also deprives it of all power with regard to that particular portion of the general subject of money-lending which consists of the law in respect to promissory notes. When a subject falls exclusively within List II, then the Provincial Legislature has full power, and Federal Legislature has none, and the fact that a law passed by the Provincial Legislature upon that subject may conflict with the existing Indian law in regard to that subject will not render the legislation ultra vires or invalid. On the other hand, if it is found that the Provincial Legislature, while purporting to legislate upon a subject in List II, has trespassed upon a field defined in List I and reserved under S. 100 (1) for the Federal Legislature, then nothing can make that legislation valid. S. 107 cannot apply. S. 107 (2) cannot be employed and the assent of the Governor General or of His Majesty cannot make the Provincial Law prevail even within the area of the Province. The Bihar Money Lenders Act, in view of S. 8 of that Act, does trespass upon the subject of promissory notes, since it modifies and alters the existing Indian law, namely, the Negotiable Instruments Act, which has been expressly enacted upon that very subject. S. 8 of the Bihar Money Lenders Act, when applied to suits upon promissory notes, undoubtedly modifies the existing rights and liabilities upon promissory notes as specified in the Negotiable Instruments Act,and it thereby affects the law with regard to promissory notes, and so while directly dealing with money-lending, trespasses indirectly upon the forbidden field and nullifies rights which exist in that field. Nothing in S. 8 of the Bihar Money Lenders Act can therefore debar the holder or the holder in due course of a promissory note, in a suit upon the note, from recovering the full amount of principal and interest due according to the apparent tenor of the note.

The Bihar Money-Lenders Act of 1939 is not an enactment relating to the conduct of banking business by a corporation, contemplated by Item 38 of List I of Schedule VII to the Government of India Act, It is enactment relating to money-lending failing under Item 21 of List II of that Schedule. Money-lending is only a part of the business of a bank and therefore it cannot be said that in enacting the Bihar Money-Lenders Act the Legislature trespassed upon item 38 of List I, of Schedule VII, to the Government of India Act. S. 13 of the Bihar Money-Lenders Act does not legislate directly or indirectly with regard to the conduct of banking business and is not inapplicable to cases where the creditor is a bank. ——S. 108 (2) (a)—"Act of Parliament"—Regulation I of 1793—Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act—Validity.

In the ordinary meaning of the expression an "Act of Parliament" is an Act passed by the House of Commons, the House of Lords and assented to by the King. Regulation I of 1793 was an enactment of the Governor-General in Council in India and was never before Parliament in England. This Regulation together with the other Permanent Settlement Regulations were enacted pursuant to the provisions and directions contained in S. 39, Pitt's India Act of 1784. Regulation I of 1793 purports to be an enactment of the Governor-General in Council and was enacted by the Marquis Cornwallis by virtue of the powers of legislation given to or assumed by the Governor-General in Council, and that being so it cannot be said that the Permanent Settlement Regulation, I of 1793 is in any sense an Act of Parliament. Consequently, the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act cannot be said to be invalid by reason of S. 108 (2) (a) on the ground that it is repugnant to the provisions of Regulation I of 1793. (Harries, C.J., Fazl Ali and Manohar Lall, JJ.) JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR. 20 Pat. 573 = 194 I.C. 663 = 14 R.P. 17 = 7 B.R. 818 = 1941 I.T.R. 386 = 4 F.L.J (H.C.) 178 = 22 P.L.T. 863 = A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 306 (S.B.).

——Ss. 108 (2) (a)—"British India"—Meaning of.

Per Manohar Lall, J.—Having regard to the provisions of Ss. 311 and 110 (a) and (b) there is no escape from the conclusion that the Act has deliberately drawn a distinction between British India and a part of British India. Consequently, the term "British India" in S. 108 (2) (a) means the whole of British India and does not refer to a part of British India. Therefore, Bengal Regulation, I of 1793, cannot be said to be an Act of Parliament extending to the whole of British India inasmuch as it applies only to Bengal, Bihar, Orissa and other settled estates in some of the provinces. (Harries, C.J. Fazl Ali and Manohar Lall, JJ.) JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR. 20 Pat. 573 = 194 I.C. 663 = 14 R.P. 17 = 7 B.R. 818 = 1941 I.T.R. 386 = 4 F.L.J (H.C.) 178 = 22 P.L.T. 863 = A.I.R. 1941 Pat 306 (S.B.).

——S 108 (2) (b)—"Governor-General's Act"—Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation.

The expression 'Governor-General's Act' in S. 108 (2) (b) refers to Acts contemplated in S. 44, Government of India Act, that is, to Acts enacted by the Governor-General after the Government of India Act came into force. The Permanent Settlement Regulation was in no sense an Act of the Governor-General but was an Act of the then Governor-General in Council. Consequently, S. 108 (2) (b) can in no way render the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act invalid because it is repugnant to Regulation I of 1793. ——S. 153 - Meaning of.

The true meaning of S. 153 is that in regard to being chosen as and thereby becoming members of the Legislature at the first elections, persons who would, but for S. 153, be disqualified under S. 25 (1) (a) by reason of their holding an office of profit under the Crown should not be disqualified if the office which they hold falls within cl. (b) of S. 153. Hence a person who at the time of the first elections, in November, 1936, held an office of profit under the Crown, which was of the class mentioned in Cl. (b) of S. 153, was by reason of the provisions of that section not disqualified for being elected as a member of the Legislature at those first elections or from subsequently sitting as a member of either chamber of the Legislature, as elected at those first elections, so long as he continued to hold that same office. It cannot be said that a case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act under S. 205 of the Government of India Act when the actual decision does not determine any such question, but in certain events, such a question might arise in the Federal Court. The mere possibility of some such question of law arising in a remote contingency cannot be enough to justify the granting of a certificate. When a man has been acquitted by two Courts in a criminal case, the High Court, before giving leave to appeal against his acquittal to a third Court, must find a clear indication in the statute that it is its duty to give such leave. When dealing with an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the Federal Court must be satisfied that the matter is one of importance and that there is really a substantial question to be determined. The Federal Court held that it was unable to hold that there was room for such serious doubt on the point as to whether S. 292 of the Constitution Act deprived the Legislatures in India of the power to legislate with retrospective effect as to justify it in holding that that was a substantial question on which leave to appeal to Privy Council was to be granted. The Court further held that it could not be said that any decision to be obtained from their Lordships of the Privy Council if this appeal was to be permitted to go to them, was likely to have a material bearing upon future litigation. Per Rowland, J. (Obiter).—If an act done by a public officer is apparently an official act, its character as such will not be changed by allegations that it was done in bad faith or that it had not that character which it purports to have. The applicability of the statute [S. 270 (1)] depends on what the act purports to be and is not affected by any allegations that the apparent state of things is not the real one. The allegation that an official act was maliciously and corruptly done will not derogate from its official character if it had that character, and what applies to the attribution of malice or corrupt motive in the mind of a single officer applies no less where the same malice is attributed to him jointly with others. The taking of cognizance of an offence on complaint, by a sub-divisional officer, whether done in good or bad faith, is clearly an official act of that officer, purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a Magistrate. It is an act which he cannot do in any other capacity and one without which there can be no institution of a criminal proceeding and it can form no foundation for a suit against him. GOVT. OF INDIA ACT (1935), S. 292.

——S. 270 (1)—"Purporting to be done"—Meaning of—Test to find out.

The words "purporting to be done" in S. 270 (1) of the Government of India Act of 1935, must be given their full meaning. Clearly, used in their context, they mean something more than "done". There must be something in the nature of the act complained of that attaches it to the official capacity of the person doing it. The accused, as head clerk to the Conservator of Forests, Sind, was alleged to have drawn a sum of Rs. 206-12-0 from the cash in his keeping and misappropriated it, making false entries in the cash book showing sums totalling this amount as paid to certain forest guards. It was the duty of the accused as head clerk to pay the forest guards and to make entries of the appropriate payments in the cash book. He was charged with offences under Ss. 409 and 477-A, I. P. Code, the accused pleaded that since sanction of the Governor had not been obtained for his prosecution under S. 270 (1) of the Government of India Act, the proceedings must be quashed.

Held, that the official capacity of the accused attached to him only so far as the entrustment was concerned, but did not attach to him so far as the wrongful withholding of the pay of the forest guards and the misappropriation. Hence sanction under S. 270 (1) of the Government of India Act was necessary only for his prosecution under S. 477 A and not for the offence under S. 409, I.P. Code, the proceedings should therefore be quashed so far as they related to the charge under S. 477-A, I. P. Code. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) EMPEROR v. MANGHARAM GHUMANMAL.

——S. 292—Scope of—If prohibits retrospective legislation.

Per Gwyer, C.J.—The purpose of S. 292 was to negative the possibility of any existing Indian law being held to be no longer in force by reason of the repeal of the law which authorised its enactment: and it is a safeguard usually inserted by draftsmen in similar circumstances. Within their own sphere the powers of the Indian legislatures are as large and ample as those of Parliament itself: and the burden of proving that they are subject to a strange and unusual prohibition against retrospective legislation must certainly lie upon those who assert it. There is nothing in the language of S. 292 which suggests any intention on the part of Parliament to make them subject to that prohibition, nor is there any explanation why Parliament should have desired to do so.

Per Sulaiman, J.—Although the main object of enacting S. 292 was to preserve the enforceability of the then existing laws, the language of the section is more emphatic than would have been ordinarily necessary. There is nothing in S. 292 which debars Central or a Provincial Legislature which has altered, repealed or amended a previously existing law, from giving the new provision a retrospective effect from dates earlier than when the Act is passed.

Per Varadachariar, J.—A provision like S. 292 is usually inserted in similar Acts, to indicate that the repeal of the parent Act shall not be deemed to have repealed all the laws passed under that Act. That being the reason, it is not necessary or proper to lay undue stress on the word 'until' used in S. 292 and hold that the policy of this provision is different from that underlying similar provisions in other constitution Acts. There is no justification for drawing a distinction between the statement that the previous law shall continue in force subject to repeal or amendment by later legislation and the statement that it shall continue in force until repealed or amended by later legislation. That Parliament might have had some reason or motive for denying to the Indian Legislature the power of retrospective legislation with reference to pre-existing law seems to rest on mere speculation and is not a fair inference from the language used in the section. ——S. 306—Scope — Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act—Notification of temple under—If act of Governor—Jurisdiction of Court to quash by writ of certiorari—Arbitrary and illegal orders—Quashing of.

Where the Hindu Religious Endowments Board has abused its powers in notifying a temple under Chapter VI-A of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, the High Court has power to quash the Board's orders on which the notification is based, and if the basis of the notification is illegal, the notification is illegal. Even if the notification in such circumstances remained a lawful notification, the Court would still be in a position to take effective action. The provisions of S. 306 read with S. 109 of the Government of India Act, 1935, do not make the notification under the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act an act of the Governor which cannot be challenged in Courts. Where on the facts it is found that the Board's action in notifying a temple was arbitrary and an abuse of its powers, the order of the Committee of the Board and that of the full Board on appeal under S. 65 A of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act should be quashed. Per Gwyer, C.J.—The subjects dealt with in the three Legislative Lists are not always set out with scientific definition. It would be practically impossible for example to define each item in the provincial list in such a way as to make it exclusive of every other item in that list, and Parliament seems to have been content to take a number of comprehensive categories and to describe each of them by a word of broad general import. None of the items in the list is to be read in a narrow or restricted sense and each general word should be held to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be said to be comprehended in it.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The lists even if taken together may not prove to be exhaustive. It is quite possible to conceive of cases which are not comprised in any of the lists. GOVERNMENT TRADING TAXATION ACT (III OF 1926)—Applicability—If confined to business carried on in British India.

The Government Trading Taxation Act applies wherever a Government specified in the Act, i.e., a Dominion Government, including the Government of a Native Indian State, carries on a business anywhere. There is no justification for holding that the Act is confined to business carried on in British India. The title, preamble and the operative part of S. 2 of the Act make it perfectly clear that it applies to every case in which a Dominion Government is carrying on a business, and when that happens, the Dominion Government is liable to Indian income-tax as though it were a company. ——Scope—If ultra vires—Government of India Act (1919), S. 65—Tax on income accrued or received in British India by person resident outside—If competent.

Broadly speaking it is accurate to say that income-tax is a tax imposed upon a person in relation to his income. But that does not mean that legislation as to income-tax can never be regarded as legislation as to a thing in British India within the meaning of S. 65 of the Government of India Act of 1919. A tax on income accruing or arising or received in British India by a person resident ouside British India, is legislation relating to something, i.e., certain income, in British India, and therefore falls within the very wide and general words of S. 65 of the Government of India Act. The Government Trading Taxation Act of 1926 falls within the legislative powers, conferred by S. 65 of the Government of India Act, and is therefore intra vires the Government of India. The income from the investments made by a Native State Bank of a part of its surplus funds in the Government of India Securities must be held to be profits from the business of the bank received in British India and as such taxable under the Indian Income-tax Act by reason of the Government Trading Taxation Act. A property situate in British India, taken over by such a Native State Bank from a debtor who is a subject of that State, in part satisfaction of a loan advanced to him is not property occupied in British India for purposes of the business, but the income derived from such property is income arising in connection with such business and in that sense falls to be taxed under the Indian Income-tax Act. Profits made by such a bank on the sale of its investments in Government of India Securities, being the surplus realised by it over the cost price of such investments, which are not appropriated as accretions to capital but treated as profits, are assessable to income tax under the Income-tax Act. Lands included in Touzis belonging to a zemindar were resumed under Bengal Regulation II of 1819 and Regulation III of 1828. Where certain villages are granted in jagir to three brothers of a non-Hindu family, who are incapable of

The fact that the grantor is the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, in whose family the rule of primogeniture prevails, or that there is a custom of primogeniture prevalent in Chota Nagpur cannot be taken as a ground for holding that the rule of primogeniture should be applied to the grant or for holding that the grantor, Maharaja, has no power to grant a jagir in law to more than one person even when the grantees are members of the aboriginal tribe of kurmi ohdars in Chota Nagpur. The Court in each case has to decide on the facts whether the grantees family is governed by custom, or by the rule of primogeniture, or the rule of agnatic succession or whether the rule of Hindu Law applies. It has to be shown by sufficient evidence that the particular family has adopted the custom of primogeniture when they are not of the same family as the grantor. ———S. 17—Mahomedan minor—Female relation having preferential right to custody marrying stranger—If thereby disqualified from being appointed guardian—Considerations for Court.

A female relation of a Mahomedan minor who has under the Mahomedan Law a preferential right to the custody of the minor, can be appointed guardian of the person of the minor under S. 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act if the welfare of the minor would be better served thereby, although she has married a person who is not related to the minor in the prohibited degrees. Under the section, the welfare of the minor is the primary consideration and even a stranger may be appointed a guardian in preference to a relation if the Court considers that the welfare of the minor demands it. The section, no doubt, also enjoins that the Court should wherever possible, make an appointment which is consistent with the personal law to which the minor is subject; and that when the personal law definitely forbids the appointment of a certain person as guardian, such person should not be appointed. The Mahomedan Law, however, does not lay down that a woman who has married a stranger to the minor is "disqualified" from being appointed a guardian under any circumstances. It merely lays down that such a woman loses any preferential right which she had by virtue of her relationship to the minor. Neither the fact that such a woman is only 21 years of age and has children of her own, nor the fact that the application for guardianship is made on her behalf by her father, is an adequate reason for refusing to appoint her as guardian. S. 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act bars an application by the maternal grandmother of Mahomedan minor girls against their father for the appointment of a fit and proper person as their guardian and for custody of the minor girls unless the father is shown to be unfit. Though the maternal grandmother under the Mahomedan Law is entitled to the custody of minor girls who have not attained puberty, failing their mother, in preference to the father, the latter is their legal guardian, and S. 25 cannot apply so as to entitle the maternal grandmother to the custody of the minor girls in the absence of proof that the minors had ever been in the custody of the grandmother and had left or been removed from such custody. There can be no question in such a case of the Court arriving at the conclusion that "it will be for the welfare of the wards to return to the custody" of the grandmother. ——S. 25—Minor never in custody of father—Application by father for his custody—If maintainable.

A father can make an application under S. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act for the custody of his minor son although the minor was never in his custody and lived all along with his maternal grandparents. The word "custody" as used in that section refers not only to actual but also to constructive or legal custody. When the father of a child is alive and has not abandoned his right, the maternal grandfather or for the matter of that any other relation who has the actual custody of the boy must be deemed to have that custody with the knowledge and consent of the father. Legally it is the father who has the custody of the child in such circumstances, and the child can be deemed within the meaning of the section, to be removed from such legal custody, when the person in whose actual possession he is, repudiates to the guardian's knowledge the right of the latter to the actual or legal custody of the minor. Where a person has been appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act to be the guardian of the property of certain Mahomedan minors, an alienation by him of the minors' properties without obtaining the Court's permission, would be only voidable and not void. It is idle to speculate on what the legislature probably intended by the unqualified and unexplained repeal of a particular Act, since the effect of such a repeal is laid down in S. 5 of the General Clauses Act. Where no words of qualification or explanation appear in a Repealing Act it is idle to pretend that a 'contrary intention appears', so as to oust that section, unless the result of applying it would be to produce an absurdity. Where an order restricting a person's movement is passed under the Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, it remains unaffected by the repeal of the Habitual Offenders Restriction Act by Burma Act I of 1936. It is not necessary that the plaintiffs should prove some pecuniary and particular loss over and above what has been suffered by the public generally, even when the suit is not framed under S. 91 or O. 1, R. 8, C. A person in the immediate neighbourhood and entitled to use a local public thoroughfare has a special cause of action and that irrespective of whether he has proved special damage or not; the real principle is that a person of an immediate community or section of the public who is deprived of an amenity provided for that particular section may be deemed to have suffered loss without proof of such loss. ———Obstruction—Wall across public road interfering with enjoyment of property by owner—Suit by latter for mandatory injunction to remove wall—Allegation and proof of special damage—Necessity.

The respondents brought a suit for a mandatory injunction against the appellants requiring them to remove a wall which they had built close to the respondent's house. It was about six feet high and was built across a public road, and the respondents stated that as a result of this obstruction to the road they were unable to approach their house from that side (left) and that the enjoyment of their property had been seriously interfered with. All this was not, however, specifically stated in the plaint.

Held, that if the respondents' allegations were true, the appellants' action in erecting the wall must constitute a nuisance to the respondents and would seriously affect the respondents as the owners of the house and therefore they had suffered special damage. But they were in error in not averring in the plaint that they had suffered special damage and making this the basis of their claim. ———Public road—Ownership to soil—Presumption—Right of adjoining landowners—User by public—If ground for holding that it is Government property—Bombay Land Revenue Code, S. 37—Effect of.

The existence of a highway or a public road is consistent with the ownership of a private person in the soil both according to the English law and the Indian Law. Under the Indian law, as under the English law, there is a presumption that a highway, or waste land adjoining thereto, belongs to the owners of the soil of the adjoining land. The site of the road must be presumed to belong to the adjoining proprietors half to one and half to the other up to the middle of the road. Where the property is bounded by a road or a river, the boundary even if given as the road or the river, is the middle of the road or the river, as the case may be. Therefore, the use of the road by the public for passage as of right is not inconsistent with the proprietorship of a private individual to the soil of the road, and, therefore, a road cannot be said to be the property of the Government because it is used by the public. S. 37 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code is not a bar to a claim by a private individual to the soil of a public road or a highway. The section has not the effect of taking away any rights which existed when it became law. It deals only with what is not the property of individuals.

The right to go in procession in streets or a highway with music is a natural right inherent in every subject of the state. User is not necessary to the creation of the right, and it must be given effect to unless it is shown that it has been taken away by some order or custom or unless the exercise of such right would obstruct the use of the street by others. But worshippers in a mosque or temple which abuts on the highways have no right to compel the members of the procession to stop the music completely while passing the temple or mosque on the ground that there is continuous worship inside it or that the music offends against the religious sentiments of a community other than the one to which the members of the procession belong. ——Adoption — Widow — Power of — Prohibition against adoption—What amounts to—Will by husband in respect of property—Implied prohibition of adoption—When to be inferred—Testator emphasising rights of brother as sole surviving coparcener—If amounts to prohibition of adoption.

A disposition of property by a Hindu husband inconsistent with his wife's right of adoption may justify an inference that an adoption was impliedly prohibited. Whether an implied prohibition is to be inferred or not depends not upon whether the will would be valid or invalid under Hindu Law, but upon the intention of the testator as to the way in which the property is to devolve. Whether it devolves by his own volition or independently of it is not important if the course of devolution would be altered by an adoption which he could prohibit. Where the husband has said nothing about an adoption one way or the other, and the prohibition of adoption is sought to be inferred from statements about other matters or from conduct, the inference suggested, if it is to be acted upon, must be a necessary inference. The Court must be able to say with confidence that what the husband had said or done shows that he would have prohibited an adoption, either in any circumstances or in the circumstances existing at the material time, if he could have foreseen them. If the Court can say no more than that he might have, or even that he probably would have, prohibited an adoption in any circumstances or in those particular circumstances, that is not enough. For in that case it cannot be said that his statements or his actions are equivalent to a prohibition, and in the absence of prohibition there is an inherent right to adopt. One of two undivided brothers who formed a joint Hindu family died in 1907, leaving a will dated 29th August, 1907, addressed to his brother B. The deceased left two widows K and P. The will after reciting that the testator had no male issue and that B was his elder brother and both were undivided inter alia stated: "All the estate, pots, clothes, cattle also the entire property are joint. You are the only heir of the property and the said property is in your possession . . . . . If my two wives do not live with you, Rs. 50 should be given to each for their maintenance. Ornaments worth Rs. 1,000 are on the person of each of them. Let them remain on their persons during their lifetime. After their death, they are yours only. Excepting maintenances they have no other right whatsoever. . . . . In order that my name should remain after my death, Rs 100 per annum should be spent on religious acts, etc. You should do this, and you and your descendants, heirs and legatees should enjoy the ownership of the entire estate from generation to generation. On the strength of this will you should get the Khata transferred to your name in respect of the above lands. In regard to that my wives and anybody else whatever have no sort of right at all . . . . . All the rights go to you only and are with you . . . . " Soon after the testator's death his senior widow K adopted a boy who died unmarried in or about the year 1911. On 29th April, 1931, K adopted the plaintiff who was a son in-law of B, the surviving brother. B died in 1936, and afterwards the plaintiff filed a suit to set aside two deeds of gift executed by B in favour of two of his daughters. The latter pleaded, inter alia, that the adoption of the plaintiff was invalid on the ground that an adoption was prohibited by the terms of the will executed by the deceased.

Held, that the deceased was only anxious that the family should continue to be regarded as what it was in fact, a joint family, and that there should be no trouble after his death. The fact that he emphasised the rights of his brother B as the sole surviving coparcener did not necessarily lead to the conclusion that he was opposed to one of the ordinary incidents of a joint family or that he would have objected to an adoption by his widow if his brother himself did not object to it. It could not be said with any confidence that the deceased would have prohibited the adoption of the plaintiff who was B's son-in-law if he had foreseen it, and that at any rate the Court could not spell out any prohibition from the terms of the will. The widow of a gotraja sapinda, enjoying a widow's estate, cannot by adoption divest the estate of a reversioner and thereby alter the order of inheritance of the property inherited by her as widow of a gotraja sapinda. ——Adoption — Widow—Successive adoptions—Unauthorised alienation after death of first adopted son and before second adoption—Right of second adopted son to sue for possession of property alienated—If arises on adoption or is postponed until death of widow.

The rights of a Hindu widow in the property which she holds as the heir of her son are co-extensive with the rights which she possessed when she held it as the heir of her husband. In both cases she possesses the right of alienating for the period of her life, but not beyond, except in the case of necessity. In other words the quality of the estate is the same. An alienee will be defeated not only by a first adoption, but also by a second adoption, the widow's powers of alienation being the same when she holds the property as a mother as when she holds it as widow. A person contracting with a childless widow does so subject to the knowledge that she may possess, or may be given, a right to adopt. The second adopted son is just as much the son of his adoptive father as the first adopted son, and must be given the same rights in the property which are found to be his father's estate as to the first adopted son. The second adopted son must be put on the same footing as his deceased brother. That is in accordance with Hindu conceptions of what is right and proper. On 9th February, 1891, a Hindu widow having her husband's authority adopted a boy who, after becoming a major, died unmarried in February, 1907. In 1922 the widow entered into agreement of partition with M who was then the nearest male reversioner to the estate, under which the estate was divided between them, the intention being that each should have an absolute interest in the allotted portion. This transaction was regarded as one which did not operate as a surrender of the estate to M and did not bind the reversion. In 1926, the widow adopted R (the plaintiff) in exercise of the power of adoption conferred upon her by her husband and with the consent of the nearest sapinda. On attaining majority, R filed a suit to recover the property which was delivered to M as the result of the partition in 1922. The widow was alive and was made a defendant to the suit.

Held, that the adoption of R gave him an immediate right to sue to recover the property and his right of action was not postponed until the death or re-marriage of the widow. ——Alienation—After-born son or coparcener—Right to challenge—Alienation without necessity—Absence of consent of sons or coparceners then living—Son born before ratification of alienation—Right of to challenge.

Where an alienation of joint family property is made by a father or manager without necessity and without the consent of the sons or other coparceners then living, it would not only be invalid against them but also against any son or coparcener born subsequently but before they had ratified the transaction. ——Alienation—Alienee from coparcener—Right of—Determination—If subject to fluctuation due to subsequent births in family—Ascertainment of share—If to be as on date of alienation or on date of suit—Alienated property less than share of alienor on date of alienation—If to be allotted to vendor—Equities.

Under the Hindu law an alienee of the interest of a coparcener is entitled to enforce his claim against the family estate on the basis of the vendor's right at the time of the alienation, and not at the date of the suit by the alienee. There is no fluctuation in the share to which the alienee is entitled as a result of additions to the family by subsequent births. A Hindu father alienated an item of joint family property by way of sale on 10—9—1921. The family then consisted of the father (alienor) and his two sons, who were both minors. Subsequently three other sons were born to the alienor between 1921 and 1931. In a suit by one of the sons for a partition and to set aside the alienation, it was held that the alienation was not binding on the sons' interests, but as the property alienated represented less than one-third of the family property to which the father would be entitled on the date of the alienation, the Court did not set aside the alienation. On appeal, Held, (1) that the alienee's right should be ascertained with reference to the state of the family as on the date of the alienation and not as on the date of the suit, and the father would be entitled to one-third of the family estate; (2) that since the property sold represented less than one-third, namely, what the father was entitled to as his share of the family property at the date of the alienation, the Court was justified in allocating the alienated property to the vendor's share so that the alienee need not be disturbed. A daughter inheriting her mother's property on her death has power under the Hindu Law to alienate a reasonable portion of such property for defraying the expenses of the marriage of her daughter's daughter (the mother of the girl being dead and her father being poor); such an alienation is valid as the purpose is a pious and meritorious purpose which would conduce to the spiritual benefit of the parents of the alienating daughter. ——Alienation—Father's alienation not supported by necessity—Right of after-born son to challenge.

It is undisputed that a sale or other alienation of joint family property which was binding upon the whole joint family as existing at its date cannot be affected by other coparceners arriving in the family at a later date, as it had become completely effective against the whole family before they arrived. Where a Hindu father, where he and his eldest son are the only members of the joint family, alienates joint family property, that alienation binds the father's half-share in the property concerned, and no later addition to the coparcenary can affect that; nor can any coparcener who comes into existence afterwards question it. But if the alienee wishes to enforce his alienation against any interest in the joint family property beyond the father's share, he must prove family justification for the alienation or that he made reasonable inquiries before he took the alienation, which showed that there was joint family justification for it. If by the time the alienee tries to prove that there was joint family justification for his alienation or that he after reasonable inquiries was reasonably led to think that was so and to enforce his alienation on something beyond the father's share in the family property alienated, the father has had another son, that son who has acquired an interest in the family property by birth, is entitled to challenge the effectiveness of the alienation against any thing except the father's share. The alienee has to make out his case and to make it out against every coparcener interested in the result. While that question is open, the after-born son can resist the alienee's claim and can himself challenge it. If, however, the eldest son, though not taking part in the alienation at its date, later on joins in the alienation or adopts it before another coparcener comes into existence, or ratifies it, the alienation becomes complete against the whole of the existing joint family before any other coparcener in any way comes upon the scene. If that happens, no after-born son can challenge the alienation. (Reilly C.J. and Venkataranga Iyengar, J.) GURUMURTHIAH v. SEETHARAMAIYA. 19 Mys.L.J. 310.

Where a father of a joint Hindu family mortgages family property in order to pay antecedent debts of his own, at a time when the joint family consisted of himself and his sons, it is a valid mortgage binding on the estate. It is not necessary in such a case to consider the items of the mortgage consideration with meticulous care and find out if they are supported by legal necessity, because that doctrine does not apply and is subordinated to the other doctrine of Hindu Law, namely that the father can validly alienate for antecedent debt. At the same time, it is clear that if the antecedent debts are tainted with immorality or if the debts have no existence whatsoever the father would be committing a fraud on the family and the sons would be entitled to question that alienation. ———Alienation—Joint family—Alienation—Father or manager—New business—Necessity—Tests to be applied.

In every case of a father or manager borrowing money to finance a new business by alienating joint family property, the transaction has to be justified by legal necessity or by family benefit and benefit of the estate. In this respect there is no difference between the powers of a father and of any other coparcener and before any transaction can be said to be for the benefit of the family and of the estate, it must pass through certain tests and these are, that the transaction must be such as a prudent manager and not a prudent owner would enter into in the interest of the family and for the benefit of the estate and is either necessary for its good management or is necessary in the general interest of the family. It cannot be said as a matter of Hindu Law that it is not open to a manager of a joint Hindu family to start a new trade for the purpose of augmenting or supplementing the family income, nor can it be said that he cannot borrow money by alienating family property to start such a business. There may be compelling necessity to take such a course and even when there is no compelling necessity circumstances may exist which may render it prudent to adopt such a course and the adoption of such a course may be for the benefit of the estate or of the family. But in the latter case benefit must be practically certain and the proposed business free from any real risk or danger. The prudence of a transaction ought not to be judged by the results. ———Alienation—Joint family—Alienation—Manager—Necessity—Considerations before the Court.

Where the sale by a manager of a joint Hindu family is attacked subsequently by other members, what Courts ought to consider is to see that with the existence of certain pressure what action a prudent manager ought to take. If that pressure can be averted by other methods, those other methods ought to be availed of, but if the pressure cannot be averted except by sale of the property the manager would be entitled to sell the property and Courts should not look with meticulous care whether the bulk of the consideration was utilised for legal necessity and whether if some portion of the consideration is found to be not applied for legal necessity certain conditions ought to be imposed, but the Courts should take a broad view of the situation and find out whether under the situation the sale of the family property was the proper procedure and if it comes to the conclusion that the sale was the proper course, then if a portion of the sale consideration has not been applied for legal necessity the sale will be upheld unconditionally. The reason for this is that there would be a presumption that the balance of the sale consideration was applied for proper purposes and the transferee would be entitled to take advantage of this presumption. The Child Marriage Restraint Act is intended to prohibit marriage of a Hindu male during his minority and it overrides to that extent the Hindu Law. The first marriage of a Hindu is no doubt enjoined by the shastra but when the bridegroom is a minor whose marriage is restrained by statute, the Hindu Law cannot prevail. ——Alienation—Joint family—Alienation—Setting aside by after-born coparcener—Date of cause of action—Challenging by way of defence if open, when remedy by suit is not available—Right of redemption, if affected.

The cause of action to challenge a mortgage of joint Hindu family property accrues at the date of the mortgage. If the challenging coparcener is born (or to be more accurate conceived) after the cause of action arises, then he cannot challenge the alienation. The cause of action referred to here is the cause of action which accrues to the after-born son to challenge the alienation and not to the cause of action which accrues to the alienee to enforce his transfer. In the case of a mortgage, if an after-born coparcener has no cause of action to bring a declaratory suit, he cannot create a cause of action for himself by waiting until he is dispossessed and then sue for possession. If he cannot sue for a declaration, he cannot set up rights which he could not urge in a suit of his own by way of defence when the mortgagee sues. Though an after-born coparcener cannot challenge a mortgage executed before he was conceived, that cannot affect his right to redeem. (Stone, C.J. and Bose, J.) KASHINATH v. BAPURAO. I.L.R. ——Alienation—Joint family—Alienation—Transaction ancient—Presumption of legal necessity—Rule as to.

In the case of an ancient transaction, it must be presumed that the alienation was lawful, i.e., justified by legal necessity. The difficulty no doubt lies in fixing the length of time (intervening between the transaction and its challenge in a suit) that would be necessary to justify the application of that presumption. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule. But on the principle underlying S. 89, Evidence Act, relating to documents 30 years old, the presumption in favour of the existence of necessity may well be applied to transfers more than 30 years old provided that the original parties and witnesses to it are not available at the trial for bearing testimony to the circumstances in which the transaction was concluded. The presumption will operate with greater force in a case where the reversioner fails to bring a declaratory suit during the lifetime of the alienor. In such a case it would not be unreasonable to assume that the failure to sue for declaration was due to the existence of evidence proving necessity and the Courts would be justified in placing the onus on the reversioner of proving absence of legal necessity. ——Alienation—Limited owner—Daughter's alienation—Benefit or necessity—Burden of proof—Next reversioner's consent—Effect of—Inquiry proved as to part of consideration only—If sufficient.

An alienee from a woman who has only a life-interest in the property alienated, such as a daughter, if he does not rely upon reasonable inquiries made by himself convincing him reasonably that there was proper necessity or benefit to support the alienation, has to make out by sufficient proof, the burden being upon him, that there was such necessity or benefit. Where the alienee shows that the next reversioner, especially the next reversioner who, if surviving, would be the absolute owner, consented to the alienation by joining in it, that only means that the alienee has gone as far as reasonably he could be required to go in pursuing his inquiries. That is not by itself sufficient to raise a presumption of necessity so as to validate the alienation. Even where a lender can show that he made reasonable inquiries, which assured him reasonably that part of his advance was for necessity or benefit, it may be shown against him or by his own story that his inquiry did not provide him with justification for the whole of the amount that he advanced. ———Alienation—Manager or father—Debts incurred by father or manager as sole coparcener—Subsequent alienation to pay off such debts after birth or conception of son—If binds son—Duty of alienee.

Under the Mitakshara, a son born into Hindu joint family has an interest in the joint family property not only from the date of his birth but while he is in his mother's womb, and the other members of the joint family cannot dispose of his interest except for joint family necessity or benefit so as to bind his interest not only after his birth but while he is in his mother's womb. The law in this matter is not different in Mysore from what it is in the Madras Presidency for those governed by the Mitakshara. The fact that a sole coparcener of a joint Hindu family could, when he was such sole coparcener, alienate any part of the joint family property to pay off debts which he had personally incurred and that an after-born son could not contest the alienation, does not lead to the conclusion that an alienation made by a coparcener after a son was conceived and had an interest in the joint family property would be effective against such after-born son's interest, if it was incurred to pay off debts incurred before the son was born or conceived but not incurred for any family purpose. When an alienee from the manager of a joint family wishes to enforce his alienation not only against the interest of the manager or any other member of the family who has taken part in the alienation, but also against the interests of junior members of the family in existence at the time of the alienation who have not taken part in it, if he is to succeed in making the interests of those junior members liable, he must prove that the alienation was for joint family necessity or benefit or that he was led by reasonable inquiries to infer that that was so. It is not enough for him to say that the debt was incurred by the manager or father of the joint family when he was sole surviving coparcener and so escape the duty of proving family necessity or benefit or reasonable inquiry on his own part. To pay a manager's or a father's private debts is not a family necessity. (Reilly, C.J. and Singaravelu Mudaliar, J.) VENKATAPATHIAH v. K. RAMANNA SETTY.

Each case will have to be considered on its merits and presumptions may be made which are consistent with the evidence, the probabilities and the surrounding circumstances. The consent of the presumptive reversioners does not by itself validate an act of alienation by the widow. But, if the actual reversioner is the same person as the one who has given consent as presumptive reversioner, a different consideration arises and he is precluded from disputing the validity of the alienation. This is on the ground that a presumptive reversioner is competent to elect to treat the alienation as operative against his spes successionis even during the lifetime of the widow, and, if he himself is the reversioner at the time of her death, the consent already expressed by him is binding on him. As a general rule, a suit to set aside an alienation by a widow must be brought by the nearest reversioner. But if such reversioner refuses to sue or colludes with the widow, then the next presumable reversioner would become entitled to sue and the Court would exercise its discretion in his favour and allow him to sue. But where a remote reversioner deliberately suppressed the existence of the nearer reversioner and set himself up as the nearest reversioner, when it was found that there was in fact a nearer reversioner the Court refused to exercise its discretion in favour of the remote reversioner and held that the suit was not maintainable. Where a Hindu coparcener becomes a convert to Christianity there is a dissolution of the family tie and a severance of the coparcenary, and this position is in no way altered by his subsequent re-conversion to Hinduism. The coparcenary having once been severed cannot be revived except by a re-union, but a re-union can result only from an agreement amongst the parties. A Hindu father became a convert to Christianity in 1917 when the appellant, his minor son, was only three years old. The appellant was also baptised in the same year. In 1930, while the appellant was still a minor, the father executed a mortgage, and also incurred other debts. It was found that some time before 1928, both the father and his son the appellant were re-converted, and reverted to their old faith and were Hindus for all purposes. No case of re-union was specifically pleaded and no issue was framed on the point.

Held, that the re-conversion of the appellant and his father did not ipso facto bring about a coparcenary relationship between them, and in the absence of evidence to show that the appellant became re-united with his father after he became a major, his share of the properties of the family were not liable for the debts incurred and the mortgage executed by the father. Sons who are joint with their father are liable to pay the debts of the father, though contracted for his own benefit, provided they were not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. The liability exists irrespective of the fact that the joint family includes persons other than the father and sons. The question whether money borrowed by a manager of a joint Hindu family in any particular case was for legal necessity or for family benefit is one to be decided on the facts of each case and the onus in each case is upon the creditor to satisfy the Court that the money advanced by him was in fact borrowed for legal necessity or for family benefit. It is not sufficient, simply to show that the money borrowed was spent for a family purpose which is ordinarily met by family income. It would have to be further shown that circumstances existed at the time which justified the borrowing. Where Government revenue is usually paid out of the income, the question of family benefit cannot be decided as an abstract proposition of law on the basis that the family revenue was in fact paid from the borrowed money. A loan incurred by a manager for such a purpose when justifying circumstances do not exist for the borrowing, cannot be regarded as benefit to the family. (Baipai and Dar, JJ.) BABU LAL v. SATYA NARAIN PRASAD.

———Debts—Joint family—Manager—Decree against in respect of family debts—Manager not described as such—Sale of family property—If passes entire interest of whole family—Presumption.

It is beyond dispute that a decree against the manager of a joint Hindu family, representing the family in respect of a debt contracted for family purposes, is binding on all the members and may be executed against the whole coparcenary property. But a decree against the manager personally, even though in respect of a family debt, cannot be executed against the whole coparcenary property but only affects the manager's own interests. What has to be seen is whether the decree has been passed against him in his representative capacity or not. He need not be described as manager in the suit or decree. In order that a decree against the manager should bind coparceners not parties to the litigation, it is not essential that the pleadings should expressly state that he was being sued as manager. The question is whether in fact he represented the family in the proceedings in question. Where the manager has contracted debts for family purposes and is sued in respect of those debts, the presumption is that he is sued in his representative capacity as manager, so that a decree against him will bind all the coparceners, and if in execution of that decree any joint family property is sold, the interest of the whole family will pass by the sale. ———Debts—Joint family—Manager—Decree against on promissory note—Debt incurred for family necessity—Execution against entire family properties—Question of liability of other members not parties to suit—If can be gone into.

If a decree is passed against the manager of a Hindu joint family in respect of a liability contracted for the necessities of the family a sale in execution of that decree conveys the entire joint family property. The binding character of the decree upon the other members of the family depends not upon their having or not having been parties to the suit but on the authority of the manager to contract the liability. In a case where it can be made out that the person against whom a decree was passed occupied a representative capacity at the time and that the date in respect of which the decree was passed was one for family necessity, the entire family property will be liable to be sold in execution, even though the other members were not eo nomine parties to the suit resulting in the decree. Therefore questions in regard to the binding character of the debt and the liability of the other members should not be disallowed in execution proceedings, on the ground that the debt in question was one under a promissory note executed by the manager alone. The liability of the other members has to be decided under the Hindu Law and not by the reason that the manager had executed a negotiable instrument or a mortgage bond. ———Debts—Joint family—Manager—Legal necessity—Test—Duty of lender.

The legal necessity for incurring debt varies to a certain extent in joint Hindu families. As regards an ancestral firm where the proceeds of the firm constitute the sole earnings of the family, the most important object which must be kept in view by the family is the maintaining of that firm as a going concern. When dealing with any financial transaction entered into by the manager of an ancestral joint firm, it is only necessary for any one advancing money on the strength of property to be mortgaged by the firm, to make enquiries firstly as to whether the firm is in fact a Hindu ancestral joint family firm and secondly whether there are prima facie grounds for believing that the money is bona fide required for the purposes of the firm. When, however, the payee of such a note indorses the note to a third party, without formally assigning the debt also to the indorsee, the latter can sue only on the note and not on the debt where such an endorsee sues the maker of the note only, basing his cause of action purely on the promissory note, and obtains a decree against the maker alone, such a decree cannot be executed against the other undivided member of the family of the maker, when the element of pious obligation of a son to discharge his father's debts is absent, although the promissory note was in respect of a debt incurred for purposes binding on the joint family, such as a business carried on by the family. There is a wide difference between the father's power and the powers of a manager who is not the father. When property has been acquired by members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law out of a business carried on by them jointly without the aid of family property or family funds, such property would be joint property of the acquirers. At least the presumption would be so, and this presumption can only be rebutted by proof, the onus being on the person so asserting, that the persons constituting the joint family did not carry on the business as members of a joint family but as members of an ordinary trade partnership resting on contract. In such joint property the sons of the joint acquirers do not acquire rights by birth, but on the death of one of such joint acquirers his rights would pass by survivorship. If he left no male descendants but either a widow or a daughter, and a joint brother, the latter would take by survivorship to the exclusion of his widow or daughter as the case may be. But where, income from the joint family property is not sufficient even for the maintenance of the family, there is no basis for any presumption that the acquisitions must have been made from out of the income of the joint property. HINDU LAW—Joint Family.

——Joint family—Who go to constitute it—Effect of adoption—Continuity of family — Termination, if possible.

A joint Hindu family is not necessarily composed of persons who are coparceners and persons who are mere maintenance holders. It can and frequently does, consist of persons who, while not entitled to share and while their property rights are merely those of maintenance holders, have other rights, rights which are vital that is to say, the right of adding a 'coparcener' to the family. While such a family exists, it is impossible for the male coparceners to partition the properties and thereby destroy the power of another member. the widow of a coparcener to adopt a person who will be in the place of a natural born son to her husband and entitled to all the rights of a coparcener and the rights of an adopted son to a share, on adoption in the joint family property. The essential conception in adoption is that there is no break in the chain which links the adopted son to his ancestors. He does not start a new family, he is a son of the adopting joint Hindu family even if no single 'coparcener' exists (i.e.) even if at the time of adoption it has been reduced to a female, the adopting mother. Though an adoption may take place 'long after the death of a member, there is no hiatus, any more than in the case of the natural son, in the eye of the law, between the death of the father and the birth of the son. The line is continuous. The old joint family lives on reduced, it may be, by members separating from it added to, it may be, by births or by adoptions. A Hindu joint family cannot be finally brought to an end while it is possible in nature or law to add a new member to it. The family cannot be at an end while there is a potential mother if that mother in the way of nature or in the way of law bring in a new male member. The existing male members can separate off; they can take away their shares. They cannot prejudice the rights of the after-born male member whether the birth is natural or legal. If there has been a partition before his arrival, he can obtain a reopening of the partition and thereby get his share. (Stone, C.J. and Bose, J.) BAJIRAO TUKARAM v. RAMKRISHNA.

The position of a female including a widow who becomes entitled to receive maintenance out of the joint family property in the hands of her male relations is wholly different from that of a female who by right of inheritance becomes for the time being the representative of the family estate. In the former case the female has a personal right as distinct from the right which she would have as representative of the estate and as such any property movable or immovable, which she obtains in her personal right, becomes her exclusive and absolute property. ———Maintenance widow—Right of to maintenance—Nature and extent of—Claim for arrears of maintenance accrued due during husband's lifetime—Enforceability against property in the hands of surviving coparcener.

It is clear that under the Hindu Law the right of a wife or a widow to maintenance against her husband as well as the members of her husband's joint family is not the right of a mere creditor against the estate arising out of a contract, but is a right which attaches to her status as a member of the joint Hindu family. Although she is not a coparcener taking interest by birth, she is a member of the joint family and continues as such even after her husband's death. The right of maintenance of the widow attaches to the undivided share in the property which her husband would have got by partition had he been alive, and the widow is entitled to follow such property in the hands of the surviving coparcener who takes it. The right extends not only to future maintenance but also to arrears if accrued due even during the lifetime of her husband; the right exists whether against the husband, or against the surviving coparcener or any person who has inherited even the separate property of her husband. That being so the rule that a creditor cannot follow the property in the hands of a surviving coparcener unless it has been previously attached during the lifetime of the deceased coparcener, cannot apply to the case of a Hindu widow in respect of both arrears of maintenance and future maintenance. Although the husband's liability to maintain his wife is personal in its nature the liability is one which attaches to the property. The claim of a widow for arrears accrued due during the lifetime of her husband is therefore not a personal claim which would die with his death, but is one which can be enforced against the property in the hands of either the heir or the surviving coparcener. To entitle her to claim arrears from the date of her leaving her husband's residence it is not necessary that she should prove that she had incurred debts in maintaining herself. In order to entitle a Hindu wife to the grant of arrears of past maintenance, it is not necessary for her to prove that she had to contract debts for her maintenance. Where a Hindu wife, after obtaining a decree for maintenance against her husband, returns to her husband, and co-habits with him, she becomes disentitled to claim maintenance against him under the decree. It is that if the bride is removed by three gotras, she would be eligible for marriage even if she falls within the prohibited degrees as defined in rules (2) to (5). In the matter of computation for, the trigotra rule, the bridegroom's gotra has to be reckoned. Under the Hindu Law contracts of marriage (betrothal) entered into on behalf of minors by their legal guardians and shown to be for their benefit are enforceable at the instance of the minors. But a guardian has no right to enter into a personal covenant capable of being enforced against the minor, and hence a contract cannot be enforced against the minor while it can be enforced against the other contracting party at the instance of the minor. Where the mother of a minor girl acting as guardian and on behalf of such minor girl enters into a contract of a marriage with the father of a major, for the marriage of the minor girl with the major, on whose behalf his father is acting, and the contract is shown to be for the benefit of the minor according to the habits and customs of the community to which the parties belong, that is a valid contract and the minor can maintain an action for damages against the would-be bridegroom in case of breach by him. The filing of a suit for partition on behalf of a minor coparcener of a Hindu joint family does not automatically create a final severance of status between the minor and the family. When the guardian of a minor coparcener files a suit for partition, he remains a coparcener until the Court gives a finding that the proposed partition is beneficial to the minor; when that has been done, a severance of status takes place which dates back at any rate to the date of the plaint in the suit for partition. The minor being still a coparcener, the father's right to sell the minor's property to discharge his own debts which are not illegal or immoral still subsists until the Court finds that the partition is beneficial to the minor. Until that finding is given it cannot be said whether the sale by the father, or by the official receiver on the insolvency of the father, will or will not confer any title in the minor's property. It is therefore desirable that a sale of the minor's share should not be held but should be postponed until the Court gives the necessary finding in the partition suit. In deciding a question as to whether a mortgage by the mahant of an asthal is justified by necessity, the matter should be approached not from an absolute standard of necessity, but from the point of view of what considerations would weigh in the mind of a prudent manager. "Necessity and benefit of the estate" are general and elastic terms. To a religious institution like a Matt or asthal, its prestige and influence are of vital importance. Preservation of its prestige and influence is no less necessary than preservation of its property. Where there is evidence showing that an elephant was being maintained in an asthal from a very early time and that an elephant was necessary for use during festivals in the asthal, a mortgage by the mahant to purchase an elephant would be justified by necessity in the absence of anything to show that he did not act as a prudent manager. ———Religious endowment—Dedication—Bathing ghat—Dedication—Character and scope of.

In the case of a bathing ghat at Benares, land or other property is dedicated to an object both religious and of public utility just as much as is a dharam sala or a muth, notwithstanding that it be not dedicated to any particular deity. But it cannot from this consideration be at once concluded that in any particular case there has been a dedication in the full sense of the Hindu law which involves the complete cessation of ownership on the part of the founder and the vesting of the property in the religious institution or object. There may or may not be some presumption arising in respect of this from particular circumstances of a given case, but in the absence of a formal and express endowment evidenced by deed or declaration, the character of the dedication can only be determined on the basis of the history of the institution and the conduct of the founder and his heirs. Where with respect to a bathing ghat in Benares no express dedication was proved by production of any deed of endowment or otherwise and no manager had ever been appointed, and not one instance had been shown in which the plaintiff or any predecessor had purported to act as superintendent shebait or mutawalli but on the contrary they had been treated as owners and they had repaired and improved the ghat at their own expense and closed it to bathers on proper occasions and had levied tolls on the shop keepers during festivals, it was held that the plaintiff's predecessors or any of them had not divested themselves of all property in the ghat and accepted the position of having a mere right of management. Their Lordships further added that the river bank at Benares was a sacred and historic spot with a powerful claim to the regard of a pious Hindu, that the practice of bathing in the Ganges was not in general so directly connected with the worship of a particular deity that nothing short of complete dedication would be appropriate for a public bathing ghat. The character of the use to be made of the bank did not require it, nor did the public right of use for purposes of bathing take its origin as a rule from an immediate and express act of dedication; rather it began by acts of user which were acquiesced in by the owner of the property who in due course made pro vision for the public needs as an act of charity or piety. ———Religious endowment—Idol—Right of suit—Rights of shebait and worshipper to sue—Distinction between—Suit by worshipper as next friend of idol dismissed for default owing to his negligence—Fresh suit by shebait as next friend of idol—If barred—Analogy between minor and idol—C. P. Code, O. 9, R. 9.

Per Nasim Ali, J.—There is some analogy between a minor and a Hindu idol but the latter is neither a minor nor a perpetual minor. Although in law an idol has the power of suing, it has no physical capacity to sue. On the analogy of the power of the legal guardian of an infant, the shebait of the idol has the right to sue on behalf of the idol, for the protection of its interests. In this sense the right of suit vests in the shebait. The idol's power of suing for protecting its own interests is to be exercised by it through its de jure or de facto shebait. The worshippers of the idol are interested in the idol and as such are interested in the property dedicated to it for its maintenance. Their right to sue for the protection of the idol's property is founded upon their own interest, viz., the right of worship apart from and independent of the idol's right to sue for the protection of its own interests and properties. They have no right to exercise the idol's power of suing. If a worshipper exercises the idol's power of suing on its behalf, the idol is not bound by the result of the exercise of such powers. A suit instituted by him as next friend of the idol is not, therefore, the idol's suit. If that suit is dismissed for default owing to the negligence of the next friend, O. 9, R. 9, C. P. Code, is not a bar to a subsequent suit in respect of the same cause of action by a shebait as next friend of the idol. Even if the previous suit was instituted by a shebait as next friend of the idol, a fresh suit by the idol is maintainable The preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that a decree passed against a minor owing to the gross negligence of his guardian is not binding on the minor and that such a decree can be set aside or declared to be not binding on the minor in a separate suit brought by the minor. If this view is correct, there is no reason why this protection should not be extended to a Hindu idol, as there is no statutory law prohibiting the extension of such protection.

Per Pal, J.—Though an idol is recognised as a juristic person capable of suing and being sued, strictly speaking it has no material interest of its own. The so-called interest of the idol is merely an ideal interest very different from the interest which an infant has in his property. The introduction of the idol and its recognition as a juristic person are more a matter for procedure and the procedure in India recognises the idol as having a locus standi in judicio. The real material interest and enjoyment lie with some human beings. It is the concern of those interested persons to see how best they will protect and preserve their interests and in this respect when the properly represented idol is brought before a Court of law, that proceeding is more analogous to the one brought by a few persons representing a multitude under O. 1, R. 8, C. P. Code, than the suit by a next friend in the name of an infant, for the protection of that infant's own interest. Negligence of the person or persons representing the idol (or more correctly, the interest of the ultimate multitude having interest in the endowment) should not be available for the purpose of avoiding the result of that litigation. Normally a shebait alone can represent an idol in a suit or proceeding. Where there are several shebaits, the entire body of them will represent the idol, but under some special circumstances even a co-shebait can represent the idol. It is only under some special circumstances that the idol may be represented by (a) a prospective shebait; (b) a worshipper or any person interested in the endowment. When persons other than the shebaits come to represent the idol, they can represent the idol only by an appointment by the Court. Where in a suit by a shebait against his two co-shebaits for their removal from office on the ground of misappropriation and breach of trust and for accounts, one of them alone is found liable to be removed, the dismissed shebait should account to both the plaintiff and the other defendant shebait. If the claim for accounts is not on the basis of wilful default, it is enough if the dismissed shebait renders accounts of the moneys actually received by him out of the debutter funds and spent by him for debutter purposes. The period for which accounts may be directed by the Court will vary according to the circumstances presented to its consideration. As a general rule, the Court will direct accounts so far as there has been misapplication of funds or from the date on which the breach of trust commenced. The Court may also in the exercise of its discretion decline to direct accounts when the prosecution of them would lead to harassing and protracted enquiry which would not at all be beneficial to the endowment. A suit by a shebait brought on behalf of the deity for the removal of his co-shebaits from their office on the ground of breach of trust and misappropriation and for accounts against them is maintainable. The suit is not defective merely because all the shebaits of the deity do not appear as plaintiffs, and it cannot be held to be defective even if it is found later on that the charges brought against one or both of the defendants shebaits are not well-founded. Such a suit is maintainable even if it is neither in form nor in substance one on behalf of the deity. A shebait is certainly a person interested in the endowment and he can maintain a suit in the interests of the endowment itself for removal of his co-shebaits from their office on the ground of misappropriation of the deity's money and for recovery of the money that might be illegally retained by the latter, although the deity is not a party to the suit. The considerations in the case of succession to father's self-acquired property are different from those arising in the case of property left by a brother. The result of the distinction is that while the son's interest in his father's self-acquired property arises by birth, that of a person in the self-acquired property of his brother arises on the death of the propositus; the property passes by succession and becomes not the ancestral but the self-acquisition of the brother inheriting it. The principle of representation which applies in the case of the devolution of property from father to son does not operate in the case of a brother's succession to a brother. The circumstances as to the inheriting brother being joint with or separate from the deceased brother whose property he inherits becomes wholly immaterial. The property of a deceased brother falls to be regulated entirely by the principle of succession so as to entitle the surviving brothers to take equally. The right of illegitimate daughters to succeed to their mothers' stridhanam properties is not confined to the Sudra caste alone. If a present is given to a girl or to the father of the girl for the primary purpose of purchasing a bride or securing the marriage then it would come within the definition of sulka; but these same classes of gifts, if not tainted with the idea of purchase, being simple gifts to a prospective bride, would not fall within the definition of sulka. Where the Courts were satisfied from the evidence that the suit gift was not considered by the parties to be in any sense a payment for the bride without which the marriage could not take place.

———Widow—Mother inheriting to son—Nature of estate taken—Powers of dealing with property—Suit by reversioners to restrain waste—Maintainability—Principles.

It is no doubt true that the nature of the estate taken by a mother inheriting the property of her son under the Hindu Law is the same as that taken by a widow inheriting the property of her husband, that she is not a trustee for the reversioners and that whether the property is movable or immovable, she is entitled to have possession thereof and enjoy the same in accordance with the powers which the Hindu Law confers on her. Her powers of disposal over the corpus of the estate are limited. She can only deal with and dispose of the property for purposes which are sanctioned by Hindu Law; but where she acts in excess of her powers, there can be no doubt that she can always be restrained. Though no specific acts of waste or mismanagement are proved, yet where the property is movable or cash, and her conduct is such as to raise a reasonable apprehension that if she is allowed to have uncontrolled possession of it she would not administer it in accordance with the powers which the law confers on her, it is open to the Court to give such appropriate relief to the reversioners as would secure the property from being spent away for purposes other than those sanctioned by the Hindu Law. It is not necessary that the widow should be guilty of an actual devastavit, to justify the Court's interference; it is enough if there is the intention of committing a devastavit. The relief to be granted to the reversioners will have to be moulded according to the circumstances of the case. The principle which has to be kept in view is that while the widow or mother should not be allowed to deal with the property in excess of her powers, she must at the same time be protected from unnecessary harassment at the hands of the reversioners. V, a Hindu died in 1887, leaving a widow who succeeded to his properties for a limited estate under the Hindu Law. In 1923, the widow executed a deed of surrender by which she relinquished the entire estate inherited by her from her hustand to N and the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant, who were the then nearest reversioners. She received certain amounts from the reversioners for her maintenance and other expenses. Among the properties included was an item which was claimed by the appellant's predecessor as his own but which the widow and N claimed as part of V's estate. Ultimately it turned out that that item was the exclusive property of the appellant's predecessor. In a suit for partition by N for partition of this property, the appellant claimed that the property could not be partitioned as it was the exclusive property of his predecessor and that the same was not part of the estate of V. N contended that the appellant was estopped from raising that plea as he had taken under the deed of surrender.

Held, that an essential condition for the application of the doctrine of estoppel or election founded on the rule against permitting a party to approbate and reprobate the same transaction, was that the person sought to be estopped or his predecessor should have obtained possession of the property under the deed, and that condition was not present in the case, because the appellant's predecessor did not obtain title to the property or possession under the deed of surrender; (2) that the surrender by the Hindu widow did not amount to a conveyance, but was only a self-effacement by her, and this principle was not displaced by a reasonable provision being made for the maintenance of the widow, when it was made bona fide; (3) that there was no scope for the application of the doctrine of estoppel or election, as in case of election, the property surrendered could not go back to the widow but to the reversioner of her husband; and if it did go back, all of them including the reversioner who refused the gift would take the property by inheritance, election or no election; and (4) that the appellant was not therefore estopped from relying on the title of his predecessor in interest. In construing a bequest made by a testator the Court has to ascertain his intention. If the testator is intended to have conveyed a benefit on a particular individual as a persona designata, the bequest would take effect although the description of the person may be, or may turn out to be, wrong. If, on the other hand, the testator's intention is found to be that the bequest is conditional on an adoption or on some other relationship on account of which he is making the gift, the gift must fail if the adoption or other relationship is not found to exist or does not come to existence. A Hindu, V left a will dated 27th April, 1923, which provided, inter alia: "I am now ill in body and apprehend that I may not live. As I have no male issue and as I have a female issue by name R I have brought to my house five years ago. P.S. son of my uterine sister, and I have been keeping him in my house and giving him education with a view that a marriage may be celebrated by giving my daughter to him and that these two might become entitled to and enjoy the movable and immovable properties specified herein. I have kept him as the huqdar of the office of village Munsif in Vasili held by me and kept him as Illatom . . . . . out of the remaining movable and immovable properties owned by me, my daughter R. and my illatom son-in-law P. S. shall, after my lifetime, enjoy with absolute right two shares out of the four shares. My wife, my mother and father shall retain in their possession the other two shares, bring and keep in our house my wife's brother G., . . and the said G., shall, after the lifetime of my father and mother, have a right to one share. The other one share shall, after the lifetime of my wife L. pass to my daughter and son-in-law. She shall be in enjoyment of them till then". The testator died two days later. P. S. died before his marriage on 22nd June, 1926, leaving his mother as his heir. He was then about 13 years old. R., was subsequently married to another. P. S.'s mother brought a suit for recovery of the share bequeathed by V. to her son P. S. under the will.

Held, that the will was providing for the person who was to marry the testator's daughter and not for P. S. in any other capacity; the illatom son in law was not a mere description of P. S. and the property was meant to be given to the prospective son-in-law in his capacity as son-in-law and not to P.S. in his individual capacity On a proper construction of the will, therefore, the bequest to P. S. and R, must be held to have been made on the condition that they were married to each other, and V. did not intend to confer any benefit on P. S. if the latter did not marry his daughter,

Held, further, that the fact that P. S. was called an illatom son-in-law before his marriage was not of any importance. (Pandrang Row and Abdur Rahman, JJ.) RAMAMMA v. VENKATALAKSHMAMMA.

——Validity of Act—Act, if properly passed—Change of powers of Legislature during passage of Bill from Legislative Assembly to Council of State—Effect of.

No objection can be taken to the validity of the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937, on the ground only that it was introduced into the Legislature and passed by the Legislative Assembly before Part III of the Constitution Act came into force, as the Indian Legislature which was in existence immediately before the coming into force of Part III was continued in existence afer that date, and was in all respects the same legislature, though its legislative powers were no longer as extensive as they had previously been. Nor can any objection be taken to the validity of the said Act on the ground that the powers of the Legislature changed during the passage of the Bill from the Legislative Assembly to the Council of State. The form, content or subject-matter of a Bill at the time of its introduction into, or of its consideration by, either Chamber of the Legislature is a matter with which a Court of law is not concerned. ——(amended by Act XI of 1938)—Validity of Act—Act, if invalid as regulating succession to agricultural land and devolution by survivorship—"Property"—Meaning of—Government of India Act, Sch. VII, List III, Entry No. 7.

The Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937, and the Hindu Women's Right to Property (Amendment) Act, 1938, do not operate to regulate succession to agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces; but do operate to regulate devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land. When a Legislature with limited and restricted powers makes use of a word of such wide and general import as "property", the presumption must be that it is using it with reference to that kind of property with respect to which it is competent to legislate, and to no other. In the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937, the word "property" must accordingly be construed as referring to property other than agricultural land, and on the true construction of the said Act and especially of the word 'property' as used in it, no part of the Act was beyond the Legislature's powers. Though S. 3 of the Act of 1937 does not use the word "survivorship", and it may be that the widow taking a share under the Act does not become a coparcener with the other sharers, yet there can be no doubt that in the cases in which it gives to the widow of a deceased coparcener a right to a share in the joint property which she did not possess under the pre-existing law, it takes away to that extent, the benefit of the rule of survivorship which would have accrued to the remaining coparceners. So far as its effect goes, the Act does legislate "with respect to the law of survivorship. But it is not ultra vires the Indian Legislature on that ground, as the subject of devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land is included in entry No. 7 of List III of the concurrent list. Under S. 3 (2) of the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, a widow gets the same interest which her husband had in the joint family property, that is the

The widow takes that interest subject to the rights and obligations attached to that interest and subject to the restrictions placed on her powers by Cl. (3) of S. 3. ———Dissolution—Jurisdiction of Courts—Tests—British and non-British subjects—Law in India.

According to English law, a Court has no jurisdiction completely to dissolve the marriage tie unless the parties are domiciled within its jurisdiction at the time when the proceedings are commenced. By the amendment of 1926 the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act as regards domicile have been brought into conformity with the law of England. Further, in order to enable certain British subjects not domiciled in India, to obtain relief in matrimonial causes in the Indian Courts, the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act was passed in 1926, which conferred upon High Courts in this country power in certain cases with respect to dissolution of marriages, the parties whereof are domiciled in England and Scotland. As regards non-British subjects, however, the law remains unchanged, and according to the ordinary principles of private international law, a petitioner in this country with a foreign domicile, who wishes to obtain dissolution of his marriage must seek the appropriate relief in the Courts of the country in which he is domiciled. Certain general principles of law relating to the determination of matrimonial suits are firmly established in the realm of private international law: (1) the forms necessary to constitute a valid marriage and the construction of the marriage contract depend on the lex loci contractus, that is, the law of the place where the marriage ceremony is performed; (2) on marriage the wife automatically acquires the domicile of her husband; (3) the status of spouses and their rights and obligations arising under the marriage contract are governed by the lex domicilli, that is, by the law of the country in which for the time being they are domiciled; (4) the rights and obligations of the parties relating to the dissolution of the marriage do not form part of the marriage contract, but arise out of, and are incidental to such contract, and are governed by the lex domicilii: (5) it is the duty of the Court before which a matrimonial action is brought to decide in accordance with the rules of its own municipal law, whether it has jurisdiction to entertain the action. If the lex fori contains a definite rule governing jurisdiction over the case, that rule must be followed irrespective of the question whether it is in accordance with the corresponding rule of other countries or not, and whether the decree granted by the Court would or would not be recognised by the tribunals of a foreign country. Where a woman has lived for a number of years with a man as man and wife, the onus of proving that she was living in sin rests on the persons who make the allegations. The question of onus assumes importance when one side produces evidence while the other side produces no evidence whatever. But where both sides produce evidence and after considering it two Courts come to a concurrent finding, the question of onus loses all importance. The presumption in favour of marriage is not a conclusive one and is rebuttable. The presumption in favour of the marrriage of a Brahmin widow in an out of the way village cannot be so strong as for example that in favour of marriage of a Shudra woman in which community re-marriage is recognized by custom. ———Separation deed—Covenant that neither party to have any claim against other in respect of any matter or account—Deed acted upon for several years—Subsequent suit by wife for judicial separation and alimony on ground of desertion—Maintainability.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation and alimony on the ground of desertion, a separation deed entered into by the parties is a conclusive answer to a claim for desertion without reasonable cause. The deed constitutes a reasonable cause. When there is a formal separation deed entered into by the parties on the advice of their respective solicitors and acted upon for several years, under which the husband has made all the payments he was required to make, it cannot be ignored by the Courts when no attempt has been made to set that deed aside. The deed must be acted upon and as long as it stands, it is impossible to maintain that the husband has deserted his wife without reasonable cause. The petitioner and the respondent, husband and wife, who were Christians, were married in 1932. On 25—9—1934, a separation deed was executed by the parties, the parties being advised by their respective solicitors. The wife was being advised by independent solicitors who were looking after her interests. The husband paid all the amounts which he agreed to pay under the deed. There was the usual covenant by the wife not to molest the husband and to allow him to live separately, etc. Then another clause provided that "Neither party from this day shall have any claim against the other party in respect of any matter or account". In 1941, the petitioner (wife) filed a petition for judicial separation on the ground of desertion and for alimony.

Held, that the deed of separation was a conclusive defence to the claim and the petition must therefore be dismissed. (Beaumont, C.J.) ROZARIO v. ROZARIO.

The assessee was a mutwalli of a wakf, the properties of which were entirely agricultural. A suit filed against him for his removal from mutwalliship and for accounts was compromised and the terms of the compromise included a scheme of administration under which the assessee continued to be the mutwalli but his duties were defined and his powers were limited. He was bound to discharge the duties of his office under the supervision of a committee and of the District Judge. Under the scheme he received as his remuneration payable from the wakf Rs. 2,500 a month (about 1/10 of the wakf income, the maximum allowed under Mahomedan Law) plus an allowance of Rs. 500. The question was whether the remuneration received by him was agricultural income within the meaning of S. 2 of the Income-tax Act and as such was not liable to tax.

INCOME-TAX ACT (1922), S. 2.

Held, that the assessee's remuneration was conditional upon his proper discharge of his duties as mutwalli and was remuneration for such work, that it was money earned by performing his office, not rents and profits of agricultural land coming to him simply as a beneficiary under a settlement, and that under those circumstances the remuneration received by him as mutwalli was not agricultural income within the meaning of S. 2 (1) of the Income tax Act but that it came within S. 3 (2) (viii) of the Act, being a receipt arising from the exercise of his vocation whether the fund from which he was paid came originally from an agricultural source or not, and as such was liable to income-tax. ———Ss. 2 (1) and 4—"Agriculturial income"—Simple mortgagee—Rents and profits collected by receiver and deposited in Court—Payment to mortgagee—If agricultural income—Income—When accrues or arises or is received.

Under a compromise decree of 28—7—1928, in a suit on a simple mortgage, the mortgagor was to pay the mortgagee a sum of Rs. 3,75,000 in full discharge on or before 31—7—1931 until then the amount was to carry no interest. In default of payment on the date fixed the hypotheca was to become the absolute property of the mortgagee. By the decree a receiver was appointed to collect the rents and profits and it was provided that any money which the mortgagee received from the receiver should be set off against the sum of Rs. 3,75,000, and that the mortgagor should pay only the balance. If the balance was not paid the whole of the hypotheca should still be the property of the mortgagee. From 28—7—1928 until 31—7—1931, Rs. 42,000 was paid into Court by the receiver as the net collections and was later paid over to the mortgagee. The mortgagor did not pay the amount as provided in the compromise decree on 31—7—1931, and the mortgagee became the absolute owner of the mortgaged properties. The mortgagee's right to possession of the properties was finally decided by the High Court on 2—9—1936. The accounts of the mortgagee showed the mortgagor as a debtor till this date when the accounts were closed, and the moneys received in connection with the loan were transferred to a new account opened in the name of the mortgagee himself. The Income-tax authorities sought to include in the assessable income of the mortgagee for the year 1937-1938, all sums received on account of the mortgage though they had been received more than 3 years before the year of account, as well as the sum of Rs. 42,000 received by the mortgagee through the receiver. It was contended that this latter sum was agricultural income.

Held, (1) that the assessee (mortgagee) was neither the owner nor even the usufructuary mortgagee of the properties, but only a simple mortgagee whose title to the properties did not vest in him until after these moneys had been collected and paid into Court in reduction of the mortgage debt and hence the amount could not be said to be "agricultural income;" (2) that as the transaction was closed only in 1936, it was not until then that profits could properly be calculated, and the income from this transaction could therefore be said to have accrued, arisen or been received only in the year of account. The assessee was a member of an undivided Hindu family which was doing business in real property. The family disrupted in 1925 and the assessee was allotted property worth Rs. 2.40,857, including a plot of land valued at Rs. 2,500. This plot, which had originally been purchased by the assessee's father who was the head of the family, was sold in 1934—1935 at a profit of Rs. 10,000 along with another plot which was contiguous to it and which had been purchased by the assessee after the partition. The Income-tax authorities rejected the contention of the assessee that the profit which resulted to him in the sale of the plot of land was in the nature of accretion to capital assets and as such not liable to tax.

Held, that there was ample material for holding that what the assessee got on partition was converted by him into trading capital, i.e., he had converted his inheritance into his stock-in-trade; the fact that he had been purchasing other plots of land and selling them and that he had been declaring profits on such sales pointed to this conclusion only. The assessee was the manager of a joint Hindu family which exported goats and sheep from India to Colombo and sold them there at a profit. For the year 1936 1937, he was assessed to income-tax on a total income of Rs. 16,412, which included a sum of Rs. 15,139, being profits made in Colombo and remitted to British India. The Commissioner of Income-tax who revised the order of assessment, assessed the income of the assessee at Rs. 31,384, in which was included a sum of Rs. 9,000, which was said to be the amount of profit which had accrued to the assessee in British India from this business, the assessee having bought the animals at lower prices than those disclosed in the invoices when shipping them to Colombo. The grounds on which the Commissioner held that the assessee had made profits in British India were: (1) that the assessee, though he had agents for the purchase of goats and sheep within the presidency, had himself exercised a certain amount of supervision, which had its value; (2) that there was usually an element of profit involved in F.O.B. prices, and that this profit had not been included by the assessee in the profit shown by the Colombo books.

Held, (1) that the reasons of the Commissioner for the inclusion of the sum of Rs. 9,000 were of a nebulous character and fallacious and the Commissioner was not justified in increasing the amount by Rs. 9,000 or by any figure as estimated profits made in British India; (2) that in the case of a business of buying in one place animals for human consumption and selling them in another place, the profit would arise only at the place of sale that the profit made by the assessee could only be calculated on what the goats and sheep actually cost the assessee and the amount at which they were actually sold in Colombo, and the figures in the invoices whether inflated or not, would not matter. The assessee advanced a sum of money to a person on a mortgage deed in 1922, and he got a decree on the basis of the mortgage, which was passed by the Court in 1934 in terms of a compromise under which a sale deed of the entire mortgaged property was to be executed by the mortgagor in favour of the assessee within 4 months from the date of the decree; and in that event the decree was to stand fully satisfied. Possession of the property was delivered to the assessee in the same year, but the sale deed was executed only on 8th June, 1936. In the year of assessment 1937—1938, the assessee's accounting year being November, 1935 to November, 1936, the Income-tax authorities assessed the assessee's income from this transaction including it in his total income on the ground that full satisfaction of the decree was obtained only in June, 1936, on the execution of the sale deed. The assessee contended that the income accrued or arose in 1934 when he got possession of the property and so could not be taxed in 1936.

Held, that the assessee's title to the property became complete only on the execution of the sale deed in 1936, and the Income-tax authorities were justified in treating the income as having accrued during the account year and taxable in the year 1937—1938. The assessee was a partner in a firm carrying on a money-lending business at Kedah in the Federated Malay States. The senior partner of the firm was also a partner of a firm in Rangoon carrying on business under the same vilasam. The assessee had no interest in the Rangoon firm. The Kedah business resulted in considerable profits being made in 1931, and the assessee's share of these profits amounted to at least Rs. 30,000, which was remitted in that year to the Rangoon firm and placed in a suspense account. The senior partner caused the amount to be transferred on 12th April, 1932, to the credit of the assessee's account in the books of the Rangoon firm, and then utilised it in discharge of the assessee's indebtedness to the Rangoon firm. The assessee objected to it and ultimately as a result of mediation in Kedah agreed to accept Rs. 30,000, as representing a remittance of profits from Kedah to Rangoon and to the money being utlised in discharge of his indebtedness to the Rangoon firm. This was agreed to by the assessee some time between 14th February and 5th April, 1935.

Held, that though the money was actually brought into British India in 1931, it could not be taken as being then a remittance of profits belonging to the assessee, and that only in 1935 when the assessee agreed to the arrangement the money became in reality his money. Accordingly the amount was liable to income tax in respect of the year 1935—1936, as the money must be taken to be a remittance made to British India in 1935, Burma being then a part of British India. ——S. 4 (3) (i)—Applicability—Association—Profits used for charitable purposes, absence of legal obligation to devote profits to such uses—Profits—If exempt from tax.

What an assessee has to establish, if he is to avoid liability to income-tax under S. 4 (3) (i) of the Income-tax Act, is that the income assessed is derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation for religious or charitable purposes. If the purpose of an association is charitable, such as the relief of the poor, it is nonetheless charitable because some political body may consider that it affords the best method of relieving the poor and may therefore adopt the scheme. The fact that it is intended to advance the purposes of a political party, does not make it a purpose which is not charitable. But unless at the time when the profits were made, the assessee (Association) was under a legal obligation to devote the profits to a charitable purpose, the fact that in practice the profits have been devoted to charitable purposes would not create a legal obligation or trust. If the association is not bound to devote its profits to charitable purposes, and the members are free to apply to the profits to any purposes they chose, it cannot be held that the property is held under trust or other legal obligation for charitable purposes, and S. 4 (3) (i) cannot apply so as to exempt the profits from tax). ——(as amended in 1939) S. 4 (3) (i)—Applicability—Private trusts — Provision in wakf deed for setting aside of income for donor's descendants—Income remaining unspent in hands of mutwali—Assessability.

The expression "charitable purposes" in S. 4 (3) (i) must be construed strictly and can only be applied to a public charity. There is no such thing as a private charitable trust. There may be a private trust for religious purposes and therefore S. 4 (3) was amended in 1939 in order to put beyond all doubt the intention of the Legislature not to exempt even private trusts for religious purposes. Consequently, the exemption in S. 4 (3) (i) only applies to a trust the object of which is public utility. A provision in a wakf deed for the maintenance, education, marriage, funeral and other necessities of the poor and needy among the descendants of the wakf in the male line cannot be said to constitute a trust for general public utility. The trust being clearly of a private nature, the income allotted under the wakf deed for the purposes mentioned therein which remains unspent for want of beneficiaries is assessable in the hands of the mutwali. INCOME-TAX ACT (1922) S. 3.

A solicitor who was employed by a shareholder of a Company interviewed the managing agents of the Company and came to an arrangement with them which benefited substantially his client and the other shareholders for which he was duly paid for by his client. The arrangement incidentally benefited two firms of stock brokers who did not employ the solicitor. One of the firms paid a sum of Rs. 10,000 to the solicitor and it appeared that that firm received a similar amount from the other firm which had under written a part of the new shares which it was proposed to issue under the arrangement.

Held, that although the sum of Rs. 10 000 was not received by the solicitor under a contract to employ him from persons who were under no legal liability to pay it, it was a receipt by him arising from the exercise by him of his profession and was part of his income which was not exempt from tax under S. 4 (3) (vii) of the Income-tax Act, assuming that it was of a casual or non-recurring nature. The sum received by the solicitor was not a testimonial to his ability or qualities as a solicitor generally, but was directly connected with a particular professional act, namely, the part he played in procuring the new issue of shares by which the payers had derived great benefit. Consequently the family cannot be said to reside in all those places where members of the family live, and the fact that one member of the undivided family eats, drinks and sleeps at a particular place is not necessarily any evidence that the family resides there. The assessee was assessed on 31—3—1939 by the Income-tax Officer (Special Circle) Bombay and the next day, the Income-Tax Act, Amendment Act of 1939 came into force. On 15—4—1939, a demand was made on the assessee for payment of the tax. He applied under S. 27 of the Act to have the assessment set aside, but failed. On 18—4—1939, the Central Board of Revenue acting under S. 5 (2) of the Act, as amended, transferred the case of the assessee by name to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central). On 10—5—1939, the assessee appealed against his assessment and the appeal was disposed of by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, S. I. VI A Range, Bombay. The assessee applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) to state a case to the High Court under S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act, but the Commissioner refused to do so on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The assessee then applied to the High Court under S. 66 (3).

Held, (1) that cases transferred under S. 5 (2) of the Act could not include assessments already completed; therefore, the assessment in this case which was completed on 31—3—1939 was not included in the transfer of the assessee's case and hence not validly transferred, though any further proceedings relating to the assessee were validly transferred; (2) that though the Assistant Commissioner who heard and disposed off the assessee's appeal would have been the proper tribunal to hear the appeal whether or not the transfer made on 18—4—1941 embraced this assessment, yet since the transfer made on 18—4—1939 to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) was not validly made in respect of the assessment already made, it must be held that in virtue of the notifications 46 and 47 of the Central Board of Revenue published on 3—6—1939 and 10—6—1940, and the notification of 12—2—1940, that the appeal was disposed of by the Assistant Commissioner, S. I-VI-A Range, Bombay, as an officer subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, and not as an officer subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central); (3) that therefore the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) had no jurisdiction to entertain the case or deal with it, and his refusal to state a case was correct, the proper tribunal having jurisdiction being the Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay; (4) and the High Court could not therefore order the Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) to state a case under S. 66 (3) of the Act. ——S. 6—Bad debts—Deduction—When allowable—Debt, when becomes bad debt—How much of it is bad.

Although the Act nowhere in terms authorises the deduction of bad debts of a business, such a deduction is necessarily allowable. In order to permit of deduction the loss must be in the nature of a commercial or professional loss which means a loss which it was either reasonable or necessary to incur in carrying on the particular trade or profession concerned. The assessee, a piece goods merchant solely in connexion with his business, maintained an open and current account with the Bank The daily receipts of the business were paid into the account and payments for goods purchased for and on account of the business were made by cheques drawn on this account. The Bank was adjudicated insolvent, and at that time the assessee's account was in credit to the extent of Rs. 34, 367.

Held, that the amount due to the assessee from the Bank was a loss connected with and arising out of the business and was a bad debt which must be deducted in order to arrive at the true profits and gains of the business. The debt became bad when in the insolvency of the Bank the Official Assignee declared a final dividend and the portion of the debt which was bad was the portion which remained outstanding after the final dividend had been declared. The border line between a case where interest is chargeable to tax and a case where it is not so chargeable appears at times to be extremely fine. Where interest is awarded under the provisions of S. 28 of the Land Acquisition Act, it is in the nature of compensation for the loss of the late owner's right to retain possession of the property acquired. In other words, it is damages assessed in terms of interest for loss of possession of property up to date of receipt of its consideration. Further, the awarding of such interest is not mandatory but is discretionary with the Court; and the claimant is not entitled to it as of right under any rule of law. A relationship of employer and employee or of principal and agent is essential before a payment from one party to another can be salary within the meaning of Ss. 6 (i) and 7 of the Income tax Act. A restrictive covenant whereby a person undertakes for consideration to abstain from doing a particular act or from following a particular course of conduct, is something quite outside an ordinary contract of employment, and the amount so paid as consideration under such a covenant cannot be held to be "salary" under S. 6 (i) or S. 7 of the Income-tax Act. Nor would it fall under S. 6 (iv) or S. 10 of the Act. The amount is not received as the direct consequence of any actual business transacted. On the other hand it is the direct consequence of no business being transacted. To fall under the head business in S. 6 (iv) of the Act, an amount must be the direct result of profits or gains accruing from particular business actually carried on by the assessee. When the object of the transaction in pursuance of which the amount is paid is not to secure an income to the assessee, the amount cannot also fall under Cl. (vi) of S. 6 or S. 12. The fact that the payment is spread over a number of years would not make it income, because a capital payment is not any the less a capital payment because it is to be paid in equal instalments over a period of years. If the object of the agreement is not the production of an income to the assessee, it is not income within the meaning of S. 12. The assessee, who was an Ayurvedic physician carrying on business on an extensive scale in the manufacture and sale of Ayurvedic medicines, maintained a dramatic troup which gave public performances at certain seasons of the year. Adjoining the premises where the assessee sold his medicines, he kept a hall for the performances and at all the performances prices were charged for admission. For some years the assessee was allowed to deduct the loss which he had sustained in this enterprise against his business income and in the years in which he made profits out of it they were included in his assessable income. In the year 1937-1938, the Income-tax authorities refused to allow the assessee to set off his loss in the maintenance of the dramatic troupe against his profits in the business on the ground that the loss arose from a mere hobby of the assessee and not from any business.

Held, that there was no material to support the finding that the dramatic troupe was maintained by the assessee as a hobby, and though that may not be a 'business', it was clearly a source of income under S. 6 (vi) of the Income tax Act, and the assessee was therefore entitled to set off the loss against his business income. The assessee, a Hindu undivided family doing business in cloth, money lending and property, obtained a mortgage decree against T, who subsequently sold the mortgaged property to B. In the Sambat year 1992—1993 and in the following year, B paid several amounts to the assessee and entered them in his own books in the interest account. The assessee, however, credited these amounts in his books to the personal account of B, and stated in support of these entries that no instructions had been received from B as to whether the amounts paid by him from time to time should be appropriated towards principal or interest. B also stated in an affidavit that he had not sent any instructions to the assessee as to the allocation of these amounts. It was found that for Sambat year 1992—1993, B had claimed and received an allowance in respect of these payments under S. 10 of the Income-tax Act but that at the end of the year 1993—1994, B had reversed the entries and debited the items to property account and had claimed an allowance in respect of them under S. 9 of the Act. On these facts the Income-tax department held that the payments were intended to be on account of interest, that such intention was communicated to the assessee and that the subsequent reversal of the entries by B was to support the plea of the assessee that the payments were open and not towards interest.

Held, (1) that no inference adverse to the assessee necessarily followed from B's reversal of the entries and that the Income-tax department was not justified in holding that the payments were made towards interest; (2) that there was no particular reason why B should have instructed the assessee to credit the amounts to the interest accounts rather than to the principal, for it was ordinarily to the advantage of the debtor that such payments should be credited to principal; (2) that though it was obvious that some sort of message was sent by B, when the amounts were remitted, the probability was that the only message that a debtor would send would be that the money was to be credited to the decree, there being no allegation or proof that he particularly wanted it to be credited to the principal; and (3) that the facts upon which the Income-tax authorities based their presumption were not sufficient to justify such presumption. ——Ss. 9 (1) and 14—'Property of which he is the owner' in S. 9 (1)—Meaning of—Income of impartible estate held by member of joint Hindu family—How chargeable.

The words 'property of which he is the owner' in S. 9 (1) of the Income-tax Act are not to be read as meaning 'of which annual value he is the owner'. However difficult it may be in some cases to apply the simple and ordinary phrase 'owner of property' to the facts of each case, it is not permissible to substitute a phrase which is of dubious and noticeably different meaning. Again the distinction between property owned by an individual Hindu and property owned by a Hindu undivided family must be made by applying the Hindu Law. It cannot be said that because the statute to be interpreted is an Income-tax Act broader or more general notions of ownership than the Hindu Law affords are to determine the matter. The Act is an Indian Act and the distinction takes its meaning from the Hindu Law. Property though impartible may be the ancestral property of a joint family, and in such cases the successor falls to be designated according to the ordinary rule of the Mitakshara. 'The Keystone' of the position is, that the general law regulates all beyond the custom and the custom of impartibility does not touch the succession since the right of survivorship is not inconsistent with the custom; hence the estate retains its character of joint family property and devolves by the general law upon that person who being in fact and in law joint in respect of the estate is also the senior member in the senior line. Though the co-ownership of the junior member may be 'in a sense' only, carrying no present right to joint possession, if the question be whether the Hindu undivided family or the present holder is owner of the estate the answer of the Hindu Law is that it is the joint family property. The present holder cannot therefore be charged in respect of it under S. 9 of the Income-tax Act. (Sir George Rankin) COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, PUNJAB v. DEWAN KRISHNA KISHORE.

In the assessment for the next year, 1938 1939, the Income-tax authorities refused to carry forward the unabsorbed depreciation of Rs. 77,060.

——S. 10 (2) (viii-a) and (ix)—Construction and scope—Payment out of profits on specified basis as remuneration for secretaries, treasurers and managers—It can be deducted as business expenditure—If profit sharing agreement.

S. 10 (2) (viii-a) of the Income tax Act does not deal with employees of any particular class nor contemplates the exclusion of any class; the business of a company or a corporation does not become an agreement to share profits unless the expenditure incurred in remunerating them falls outside the scope of Cl. (ix) of S. 10 (2), as being either capital expenditure or not incurred for the purpose of earning profits or gains. The taxable profits or really net profits can only be discovered when every outlay has been provided for including expenditure out of income which has been incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits or gains. Where an outlay incurred in earning the profits of an assessee company is the remuneration payable to the secretaries, treasurers and managers of that company, and it is not disputed that the assessee could not earn profits or gains without secretaries, treasurers or managers, such expenditure has to be deducted from the profits and gains. It is necessary to scrutinize with care the sense in which the word "profits" or even the phrase "net profits" is employed. A sum which is to be regarded as "net profits" for the purpose of ascertaining the remuneration of the agents of a firm or the secretaries, treasurers and managers of a company, is only "net profits" in the different sense of being taxable when such remuneration can be classed as outside the scope of expenditure from income which is incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits.

Dunkley, J.—When there is an agreement between the assessee corporation and the secretaries, treasurers and managers under which before ascertaining the divisible profits of the assessee at all, the secretaries, treasurers and managers are to receive upon a particular conventional basis a commission as remuneration for their services, there is no agreement for division of profits, because in order that it can be held to be an agreement for division of profits, there must be a sort of joint venture and there must be one single profit fund for all purposes, not two profit funds to be ascertained for different purposes. Where there is one profit fund which has to be ascertained for the purpose of calculating the remuneration of the secretaries, treasurers and managers, and another and quite distinct profit fund to be ascertained (after the remuneration of the said employees has been fixed) for the purpose of calculating the

In the second, the sum payable as such remuneration must of necessity appear as an expenditure or a "revenue charge". The assessee held a mortgage for Rs. 40 000 and a second mortgage for Rs. 10,850, on the same property. In the year of assessment, when the principal and interest due on the first mortgage amounted to Rs. 71,220, the assessee filed a suit limiting his claim to Rs. 50,000 on the first mortgage and giving up his claim on the second mortgage, as the security was not worth more than Rs. 50,000. The assessee claimed from the Income-tax authorities a deduction of Rs. 10,850 (the amount of the second mortgage) from his profits as bad debt. The Income-tax department resisted the claim on the ground that the two mortgages were in substance one transaction and the suit must be deemed to be one for the recovery of the principal due under both the mortgages, and that therefore the claim for deduction was not tenable.

Held, that the assessee had in truth and fact incurred a loss of capital of Rs. 10,850 on the second transaction which he was entitled to have deducted as a bad debt. ——S. 10 (2) (xi)—Bad debt—Debt—When becomes bad or irrecoverable—Insolvency of debtor—If debt becomes irrecoverable at once—Date on which it becomes bad

It is not possible to argue that merely because a debtor had become insolvent therefore the debt was irrecoverable or to what extent it was so irrecoverable. This would be a matter which would turn on a variety of circumstances which would include the amount of property at the disposal of the insolvent, the skill with which the sale was conducted, which in the case of official auctions might be presumed, and on circumstances which nobody could entirely foresee in the future, such as the presence of bidders and the amount of property which could be attached and sold in insolvency proceedings which again might be a varying factor. The market value of a debt in 1933 could not be determined by the amount received as dividend in 1936. In 1923, a Hindu joint family loaned a certain sum of money to a firm K, which went insolvent in 1925. In 1933, the family dissolved, certain immovable property and certain debts were allocated to various members of the family, but certain joint debts due to the family, which carried on money-lending business, were taken over as they stood, by the members of the joint Hindu family. In other words, the debts were taken over at their book value by the new firm which consisted of the members of the disrupted joint family but which was obviously a separate person from the joint family which had dissolved itself in 1933. Insolvency proceedings against the debtor firm K were then pending. In 1931, a sum of Rs. 3161-14-0, had been paid as a dividend. In 1934 and 1935, other sums were paid, but on 11—6—1936, a final dividend was declared amounting to Rs. 151 12 6. The total amount received was thus Rs. 5210-15-6 out of the total loan of 18,000. The assessee claim the right to write off the difference namely, Rs. 12789 3 6, in the accounting period of 1936-1937. The Income-tax authorities rejected this claim, holding that the bad debt so far as it was a bad debt originally had been entered in the books of the new firm, and no bad debt was therefore deductible in the year of assessment.

Held, that the only date on which it could be said that the debt became finally bad would be 4-6-1936,

In respect of the assessment for the year 1934-1935 the assessee made a claim to write off as bad debts, three debts. The Income-tax authorities came to the conclusion that these debts were not (had not become) bad and therefore held that the assessee's claim for deduction in respect of these debts was premature. In the following year 1935-1936, the assessee again claimed that these debts were bad debts. The Income-tax authorities now came to a different conclusion and held that the debts had become bad long before the accounting year and therefore no allowance could be made in respect of these debts in that year.

Held, (1) that though the Income-tax authorities were not bound by the rule of res judicata or estoppel by record yet they could reopen the matter of assessment only if fresh facts came to light which, on investigation, would entitle them to come to a conclusion different from that of their predecessors; (2) that as there were fresh materials placed on the second occasion, which were not shown to have been placed before the authorities on the former occasion, it could not be said as a matter of law that the Income-tax authorities were not entitled to come to a different conclusion; (3) that the question whether the debts had become bad long before was a question of fact, and when there was evidence to support it, the High Court could not disturb the finding of the Commissioner of Income-tax. There is no warrant for holding that unless a minor is admitted to the benefits of a partnership without any contribution to the assets, S. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act (as amended by the Amending Act of 1937) has no application. There is nothing in the section which justifies the Court in drawing a distinction between a case where a minor's property is with a firm and the case where the minor is allocated a share without any contribution to the assets. The section can only be construed in accordance with the words used in it. The assessee, the head of a Hindu joint family, was a partner in two firms. The family (the assessee and his sons) became divided several years before 1937, and since then he was being assessed as an individual on his total income including his share of the profits in the two firms. The assessee's sons and daughters, some of whom were minors, were also partners in the two firms into which the family business was converted. In the year of account, 1939-1940, the Income-tax department applied S. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act which was inserted by the Amending Act of 1937 which came into force on 1—4—1937, and held that to the assessee's income should be added the partnership profits which were allocated in that year to his minor children. The assessee contended that this was contrary to the section on the ground that the minors were not admitted gratis into the firm, but owed their membership to the fact that they contributed to the assets their shares in the joint family property.

Held, that S. 16 (3) (a) (ii) was rightly applied to the case; the partition of the family put an end to the joint status and the family property ceased to exist as family assets. The assets devolved on the partnerships, and the minors were, under S. 30 of the Partnership Act, admitted to the benefits of the partnerships, and such benefits fell within the statutory provision, viz., S. 16 (3) (a) (ii). The assessees were a firm carrying on business in the names of Central Talkies Circuit, in Bombay and until 14th July, 1937, the partners were (1) V. H. Desai, with 3 annas share, (2) his wife with 3 annas share, (3) his minor son with 2 annas, and (4) his major son with two annas, and two outside partners. After the amendment of S. 16 (3) of the Income-tax Act, by Act IV of 1937, a partnership deed was executed on 14—7—1937 under which the mother of V. H Desai was subtituted for his wife and minor son and she was given $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas. That is to say, the 5 annas which had previously been divided between the wife and the minor son were distributed as to $\frac{1}{2}$ anna for V.H. Desai and $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas for the mother, who thus became entitled to $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas, the largest share in the firm. The object of the alteration was to avoid the effect of S. 16 (3) of the amended Act. On an application to register the firm the Income-tax department refused registration on the ground that the partnership deed was one prepared only to avoid "proper taxation," that it was not a genuine partnership, inasmuch as a large cash balance of nearly a lakh and a half existed in the partnership in 1937, which made it unnecessary to secure a new financing partner; there was no evidence that the mother knew anything about the business or had assisted in the conduct of the business in any way.

Held, that there was evidence to justify the finding of the Income-tax authorities that the alleged partnership was not a genuine partnership, and the order refusing registration was therefore justified.

Per Beaumont, C.J.—That the partnership deed was one prepared only to avoid "proper taxation" would not be a good ground for refusing to register. Any one is entitled so to conduct his affairs within the law as to avoid the incidence of taxation, and if a man finds that he will suffer less in taxation by carrying on business in partnership with his mother rather than his wife, he is entitled to select his mother. But the partnership must be genuine partnership.

In cases of this kind the giving of positive evidence by the department about facts which are within the special knowledge of the opposite party is almost out of question, and the materials which come within the description of circumstantial evidence or general probabilities which would justify a presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act, are materials upon which the court can come to a finding just as properly as it could upon positive evidence. The assessee, a Hindu undivided family, carried on business in three shops in three places at Cawnpore, at G. C. and H. The first and third shops did business in cloth and spices on commission, and the second did business in grain on commission. In the assessment year 1937-1938, the accounts of the said year being from 19th August, 1935 to 21st August, 1936, it was found that the third shop at H. was closed within two months of the commencement of the account year, i.e., on 17th October, 1935. The first two shops made a profit, but the third according to the assessee suffered a loss on account of interest and bad debts, etc., which the assessee sought to set off against the profits of the first two shops under S. 24 of the Income-tax Act. According to the accounts of the third shop, business was done for the first 10 days of the year, on which a small profit of Rs. 2-14 0 was made. The losses claimed were Rs. 10,947, made up of Rs. 1,084 on account of interest, Rs. 9 394 on account of bad debts and Rs. 469 on account of miscellaneous items of expenses. The entire loss of Rs. 10,947, was written in the books as having been incurred in the accounting year and none of the losses were accounted for in any year before the accounting year.

Held, (1) that the mere fact that the books showed entries on the credit side only for the first ten days did not necessarily prove that the shop was discontinued after 10 days, and that the business having been discontinued after two months of the accounting year, the benefit of such a state of affairs ought to go to the assessee and not to the Income-tax Department; (2) that bad debts were legacies of years that have gone before but became bad debts which had to be wiped out in a particular year when all hopes of their recovery were gone; and (3) that the assessee was therefore entitled to a set-off of his losses in the third shop against the profits made in the other two shops of the assessee. A partner who continues the partnership business after dissolution of the partnership "succeeds" to the business within the meaning of S. 26 (2) of the Income-tax Act. S. 44 of the Act applies only when there has been a discontinuance of the business; where a partner retires and the remaining partner continues the business, the section which applies is S. 26 (2) and not S. 44. The assessee entered into a partnership with another in 1935 for the production and distribution of a cinema film. In May, 1936, the assessee's partner retired from the partnership receiving an amount of Rs. 9,524, which represented his share of the profits, and thereafter the assessee continued and carried on the business.

Held, that S. 26 (2) of the Act applied to the case and the assessee was liable to assessment on the sum of Rs. 9,524, representing the ex-partner's share of the profits of the film business.

Held also, that even if the ex-partner had been assessed on this amount, a fresh assessment could be levied on the assessee, and the tax recovered from the ex-partner might be refunded to him. (Leach, C.J., King and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) KARUPPIAH PILLAI v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS.

INCOME-TAX ACT (1822), S. 30

Beaumont, C.J.—R. 4 (new) of the Rules under S. 26 A of the Income-tax Act as amended in 1939 does not alter the law as it previously existed; it only makes the true effect of R. 4 clearer than it was under the previous wording. Both under the old and the new rule, it is open to the Income-tax Officer to say that the shares which appear in the deed of partnership produced with an application for registration are not the true shares of the partners and therefore, there is no proper application by the requisite firm. If it were shown that one of the partners was only a nominee of a share allotted to him or another for another partner, the deed would not then specify correctly the individual shares. It must specify correctly the individual and beneficial shares.

Kania, J.—R. 4, as amended in terms, gives power to the Income-tax authorities to inquire and determine whether the deed put forward is genuine and also whether the partnership is constituted as stated in the deed. (Beaumont, C.J. and Kania, J.) CENTRAL TALKIES CIRCUIT, MATUNGA, In re.

A notice of demand was sent by the Income-tax department and accepted by X on 14—12—1937. It was contended that the services of X as acting manager were dispensed with in October, 1937, and therefore the notice was not validly served on 14—12—1937.

S. 46 of the Income-tax Act prescribes only a summary remedy and there is nothing in that section or in the other provisions of the Act to indicate that that is the only remedy by which income tax is recoverable. The time-limit prescribed in S. 46 (7) of the Act obviously applies to proceedings under that section. When income-tax is assessed, it becomes a debt due by the assessee to the Crown. The Crown as a creditor has the ordinary right of suit against the assessee. This is a right under the common law and there is nothing in the Act to take away this right. A suit for recovery of arrears of income tax would undoubtedly be a suit of a civil nature and such a suit would clearly be maintainable under the provisions of S. 9, C. P. It seems to be the scheme of the Act that the employer is to have the advantage of the deductions in respect of money which he has contributed to the fund together with the increase to the fund which his money has earned prior to the time of the transfer of the fund to the trustees. In the assessment year 1937-1938, the deposits in the personal accounts of the partners of a firm were in exact proportions to their shares in the business, and when these were included in the assessable profits, the assessee firm submitted to the assessment. In the next assessment year, 1938-1939, the items credited in the personal accounts of the partners were not in proportion to their shares in the business and when the firm was called upon to prove that these items did not come from an undisclosed source of profit, it was unable to produce any sort of account in support of its plea that the same represented capital privately held by each partner. The Income-tax authorities were further satisfied that on the days on which these items were credited, the business was not in need of any moneys from outside.

Held that it could not, under the circumstances, be possibly said that there was no material before the Income-tax authorities which was capable of supporting their finding that the deposits in the personal accounts of the partners were profits from some unknown source. A reference under S. 66 (2) or an application under S. 66 (3) of the Income-tax Act will not be competent unless it can be shown that the order of the Assistant Commissioner out of which the alleged questions of law arise or said to arise was an order "disposing of the appeal" passed under S. 31 of the Act. Where an assessment has been made, not in form only but in fact, not ostensibly but actually in good faith, under S. 23 (4) of the Income-tax Act, and where the Assistant Commissioner, upon consideration of the facts has found that the assessment was properly so made, the proviso to S. 30 of the Act bars an appeal; and the order of the Assistant Commissioner rejecting the appeal is not an order under S. 31 inasmuch as he has not "disposed of" the appeal. In such a case there can be no question of law referable to the High Court under S. 66 (2) or 66 (3) of the Act. (Collister and Bajpai, JJ.) BHIKHI RAM RAMDEO v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, C. A right of appeal must be given by express enactment and cannot be implied. The function of the High Court in cases referred to it under S. 66 of the Income-tax Act is advisory only, and is confined to considering and answering the actual questions referred to it. An application under S. 66 (3) for an order directing the Commissioner to state a case was summarily rejected by the High Court and the assessee thereupon applied under Cl. 31 of the Letters Patent and S. 110, C. P. Code, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Held, (1) that the order of the High Court under S. 66 (3) was not a final judgment, decree or order, as required by Cl. 31 of the Letters Patent, and therefore there was no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council; (2) that the assessee had no right to invoke the jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 110, C. P. Code; (3) that the mere fact that the question was a serious one was no ground for the High Court to grant a certificate of leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council when the High Court was satisfied that there was no right of appeal to the Privy Council from any order, preliminary or final, passed by the Court while acting under S. 66 of the Income-tax Act. the accounts kept by the assessee are such that the income profits and gains cannot be properly deduced therefrom; the High Court would not interfere with any finding of an Income-tax Officer on such a point unless the decision is arbitrary or capricious. The Official Assignee in a Presidency Town or the Official Receiver in the mofussil is an officer of Court discharging his function to the best of his ability. He ought not to be made personally liable for costs as between him and the estate which he represents unless he is guilty of gross misconduct in taking the action which he takes. Where the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver is a defendant or a respondent and appears in the proceedings, the usual rule, when he is not guilty of gross misconduct in the conduct of his defence, ought to be that the costs should come out of the estate. In such a case, there is no justification for the Court to make him personally liable to the plaintiff or applicant. In any case the Court before which the suit or application comes on has no jurisdiction to say whether the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver should or should not debit the costs against the estate which he represents. ———Fire, marine and life—Contract of re-insurance—If one of indemnity—Cause of action, when arises—Contract Act, Ss. 124 and 125 (3).

The words 'contract of indemnity' in S. 124 have been used in a narrow sense and the general law about contracts of indemnity is much wider than the contracts of indemnity as defined in the Contract Act. A contract of fire insurance or marine insurance is always a contract of indemnity though under the Contract Act it would more properly come under S. 31 defining contingent contracts. A contract of re-insurance of a fire or a marine insurance is therefore always a contract of indemnity whether the re-insurance is an insurance of the liability incurred by the original insurer or whether it is an independent insurance of the thing originally insured. In the case of life assurance, the contract originally is not one of indemnity. Therefore, it depends on the terms of the re-insurance policy as to whether the contract of re-insurance is a contract of indemnity of the risk incurred by the original insurer or whether it is an independent contract insuring the same life for the same sum or some portion of that sum for which it was originally insured. The document embodying the terms of a re-insurance guarantee policy ran "The Zenith Company re-insures the Tropical Company to the extent of Rs. 10,000 in part of its risk upon the life insured under its policy. It is subject to all the terms and conditions including that of settlement of claim contained in the original policy".

Held, that the terms of re-insurance did not amount to an insurance of the original life insured but were an insurance of the risk incurred by the original insurer, that is, the Tropical Insurance Company, and therefore the re-insurance was a contract of indemnity and consequently cause of action did not accrue to the original company until it had paid the policyholder.

Held further, that the contract of re-insurance did not fall within the terms of S. 124, Contract Act, and therefore S. 125 (3) did not apply or govern it. (Dalip Singh and Sale, JJ.) TROPICAL INSURANCE CO. v ZENITH LIFE ASSURANCE CO. 196 I.C. 198 = 14 R.L 143 = A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 68.

Relationship per se does not create an insurable interest when one relation effects an insurance on the life of another. To give the person effecting the insurance an insurable interest in the life of the person insured, there must be actual dependence of the person effecting the insurance on the person whose life is insured and a reasonable expectation of benefit from the continued existence of such person. An insurance on the life of a person in which the person effecting the insurance has no interest is against public policy and is also a wagering contract under the provisions of Ss. 23 and 30 of the Contract Act. The accident may consist in some negligent act, such as improper opening of a valve, or a hole made in a pipe by mischance, or it may be that sea water is admitted by stress of weather or some like cause bringing the sea over openings ordinarily not exposed to the sea or, even without stress of weather, by the vessel heeling over owing to some accident or by the breaking of hatches or other coverings It is the fortuitous entry of the sea water which is the peril of the sea in such cases. ———Policy of insurance—Construction—Clause that receipt by agent for payment of premia was only interim receipt and that formal receipt to be issued by company only—Assured to intimate to Head Office in case of non receipt of formal receipt within 30 days—If disclaimer of agent.

One of the terms of a policy of insurance was to this effect. "The receipts issued by agents are only interim receipts, and the formal receipt can be issued by the Head Office only. If any policy holder making payment to an agent of the company does not receive the formal receipt from Head Office within 30 days, he should immediately draw the attention of the Head Office to this fact for necessary action."

Held, payment by an agent was good, and a receipt of premium by the agent was receipt by the company, and that the clause in the policy was not a disclaimer of the authority of agents, but was only a provision for the benefit of the company in order that it may be afforded a check on remittances of its agents. Held; that it could not be held that as soon as the surrender value was exhausted by adjustment towards premia due which were not paid, the policy would automatically lapse on default of payment of a subsequent instalment falling due on the due date without reference to the days of grace. On a reasonable construction of the clause, it must be held that the policy would not lapse forthwith, but that the assured had the usual days of grace to pay the next premium falling due after the cash surrender value has been exhausted by adjustment. ——Duty of Court—Language of Act to be taken as it is—Construction to fit in with pre-conceived idea as to intention of Legislature—If justified—Intention to be gathered from Act as a whole.

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

It is wrong for a Court, in construing an Act of the Legislature, to make up its mind, apart from the Act, as to what was the intention of the Legislature in passing the Act and construe the Act so as to give effect to its pre-conceived idea as to the Legislature's intention. That is not the way to construe an Act. The Court has to take the language as it finds it, although, of course, it has to look at the Act as a whole and construe it so as to give effect to what appears from the language of the whole Act to be the intention of the Legislature. ———Duty of Courts—Policy of Legislature—Enquiry into.

It is not within the province of the Court to criticise the policy of the Legislature; its duty is to construe and apply the enactments made by the Legislature. It is not open to the Court to go behind what has been enacted by the Legislature, and to enquire how the enactment came to be made, whether it arose out of incorrect information or, indeed, on actual deception by some one on whom reliance was placed by it. The Court must accept the enactment as the law unless and until the Legislature itself alters such enactment on being persuaded of its error. ———Duty of Court to adhere to—Departure—When justified.

Per Iqbal Ahmad, Ag. C. J.—It is the duty of a Court of law to primarily adhere to the strict literal interpretation of the words used, and the substitution of conjunctions should not be made without sufficient reason. But if such adherence is destructive of the object of the enactment and leads to anomalies and absurdities, it is fair to assume that the Legislature did not use the words in that sense and in such a case the conversion of 'and' into the disjunctive 'or' is permissible. ———General and Special Acts—Earlier special enactment—Later general enactment—Implied repeal of former—Presumption.

Where general words in a later Act are capable of reasonable and sensible application without extending them to subjects specially dealt with by earlier legislation, that earlier and special legislation is not to be held indirectly repealed, altered, or derogated from merely by force of such general words, without any indication of a particular intention to do so. In such cases it is presumed to have only general cases in view, and not particular cases which have been already otherwise provided by the special Act. Having already given its attention to the particular subject, and provided for it, the Legislature is reasonably presumed not to intend to alter that special provision by a subsequent general enactment, unless that intention is manifested in explicit language, or there be something which shows that the attention of the Legislature had been turned to the special Act, and that the general one was intended to embrace the special cases provided for by the previous one; or something in the nature of the general one making it unlikely that an exception was intended as regards the special Act. The general statute is read as silently excluding from its operation the cases which have been provided for by the special one. ———General words following specific words—Object of the Act, it can affect rule of interpretation.

Per Iqbal Ahmad, C. J.—It is a well recognised cannon of interpretation that the general words which follows particular and specific words of the same nature as itself takes its meaning from them, and is presumed to be restricted to the same genus as those words. In other words it is to be read as comprehending only things of the same kind as those designated by them unless, of course, there is something to show that a wider sense was intended. But the general object of the Act to be construed may sometimes require that the final generic word shall not be so restricted in meaning by its predecessors. (*Iqbal Ahmad, C. J. ———General words—Restriction to purposes within Legislature's powers—Act, when and when not valid.

If the restriction of the general words in a statute to purposes within the power of the Legislature would be to leave an Act with nothing or next to nothing in it, or an Act different in kind, and not merely in degree, from an Act in which the general words were given the wider meaning, then the Act as a whole must be held invalid. If the Act is to be upheld, it must remain, even when a narrower meaning is given to the general words, "an Act which is complete, intelligible, and valid and which can be executed by itself", (*Gwyer, C.J. ———Implied repeal—Duty of Court—Onus.

A repeal by implication is never to be favoured. If it is possible to read the later Act in such a way as to make it consistent with the law as it was before the later Act came into operation, then that is the way in which the Court ought to read it. The burden is on those who assert there is an implied repeal to show that the two statutes cannot stand consistently the one with the other and that there is some strong reason for saying that the earlier of two Acts was impliedly repealed by the later one. ———Intention of Legislature—Ascertainment—Rule—Reference to scheme of Act—When justified.

The primary rule by which Courts should be guided in the construction of a statute is to consider first the words employed and ascertain their ordinary grammatical meaning. ———Language capable of two interpretations—Duty of Courts.

Per Iqbal Ahmed, J.—When the phraseology of an enactment is clear and unambiguous and capable of one and only one interpretation, it is not open to the Courts to give a go-by to that interpretation simply with a view to carry out what is supposed to be the intention of the Legislature. But if the phraseology used is capable of two interpretations, that interpretation which is consistent with the object of the enactment is to be preferred to the interpretation that would nullify that object. Though a Court cannot, while interpreting a statute, assume the functions of the Legislature to legislate, it is nevertheless its duty to put a commonsense interpretation on statutory enactments in preference to a literal interpretation that is destructive of the object of the enactment. ———Mandatory or directory—Use of "shall".

The word "shall" as used in an Act of the Legislature does not always mean that compliance with the condition is obligatory. No universal rule can be laid down for the construction of statutes, as to whether mandatory enactments shall be considered directory only or obligatory, with an implied nullification for disobedience. It is the duty of Courts to try to get at the real intention of the Legislature by carefully attending to the whole scope of the statute to be construed. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

———Meaning of words—Income-tax Act—Words used in English Act—Relevancy.

———New statute—Retrospective operation—Principles.

Per Sulaiman, J.—An act may in its operation be retrospective, and yet the extent of its retrospective character need not extend so far as to affect pending suits. Courts have leaned very strongly against applying a new Act to a pending action, when the language of the statute does not compel them to do so. It is a well recognised rule that statutes should as far as possible be so interpreted, as not to affect vested rights adversely, particularly when they are being litigated. When a statute deprives a person of his right to sue or affects the power or jurisdiction of a Court in enforcing the law as it stands, its retrospective character must be clearly expressed. Ambiguities in it should not be removed by Courts, nor gaps filled up in order to widen its applicability. It is a well established principle that such statutes must be construed strictly, and not given a liberal interpretation.

Per Varadachariar, J.—The presumption against retrospective operation is said to be so strong that it has been recognized that even in construing an act or a section which is to a certain extent retrospective, it ought not to be given a larger retrospective operation than the words clearly involve. Where it is intended to make a new law applicable even to pending actions, it is common to find the Legislature using language expressly referring to pending actions. ———Reference to previous law—When justified.

Per Blagden, J.—Where the language of an Act of Parliament leads one to no clear conclusion between two possible meanings, one is often helped by considering what the law was before the Act was passed. ———Reference to proceedings of Legislature—Grammatical construction—When to be departed from.

It is a most salutary principle of construction of statutes that in arriving at the meaning of an Act not to try to see from the proceedings of the Legislature or from any facts prior to the passing of the Act what was intended. Its grammatical meaning alone must be considered and if it leads to an impossible, that is unworkable construction, to see what variation will do the least violence to the grammatical meaning and still make the provision work. ———Remedial Act—Prejudice in some cases to those whom it is intended to help.

Even if an Act intended to be remedial is found in a small minority of cases to prejudice rather than to benefit those whom it is intended to help, the Court should adopt the construction which is on the whole best calculated to give effect to the manifest intention of the Legislature. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

——Retrospective effect—New legislation if affects vested rights.

New legislation cannot take away accrued rights unless such intention is manifest and clear from the terms of legislation Unless the plain words of a section compel a Court to hold that it has retrospective effect, no such effect will be given. (Harries, C.J. and Fazl Ali, J.) JAGMOHAN SINGH v. RAMANANDAN PRASAD NARAYAN SINGH 20 Pat. 556=13 R P. 526= 1941 P.W.N. 295= 192 I.C. 851=7 B R. 493= 22 Pat.L.T. 219=A.I R. 1941 Pat. 253.

——Retrospective effect—Presumption —Declaratory Act.

The general rule is that retrospective effect is not given to a statute; there is a presumption against retrospective effect: in the case of a declaratory Act there is no such presumption: if the meaning of words used indicates an intention that the Act is to have retrospective operation, then no matter what the consequences this operation must be given to the provisions: it does not follow that a meaning is to be given to the words of the statute, which according to ordinary usage they could not carry. so as to give to the provisions retrospective operation. ——Retrospective operation—Rules of construction.

A section giving retrospective effect should be interpreted very strictly and no more retrospective effect should be given to it than is absolutely warranted by the literal interpretation of the words actually used in the section. (Harper, S. M. and Sathe, J. M.) TIRKHA v. NAZEER BEGAM. 1941 A L.J. (Supp.) 19= 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 185=1941 O.A. (Supp.) 129= 1941 R.D. 105.

——Rules made under Act—Meaning of words—If to have same meaning as the words in the Act.

It is usually a sound rule of construction to give the same meaning to words used in rules made under an act as the words have in the Act itself. (Broomfield and Waosoodew, JJ.) EMPEROR v. RAGHUNATH RAMCHANDRA. 194 I.C. 554=13 R B. 374= 42 Cr L.J. 588=43 Bom L.R. 99= A I R 1941 Bom. 100.

——Scheduled forms—Reference to.

Scheduled forms are always dangerous guides to the meaning of a statute. (Sharpe and Blagden, JJ.) MA TIN TIN v. MAUNG AYE. 1941 Rang.L.R. 65= 195 I C. 190=14 R.R. 24=42 Cr L.J. 690= A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 135.

——Similar Acts—Same words in—Construction in the same way.

(Per Broomfield, J.)—When the same or exactly similar words are used in statutory provisions which appear to have a similar object, it is very difficult to say that they should not be interpreted in the same way. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

——Special remedy provided by statute—Separate suit—Maintainability.

Where a right is given by a special statute and a remedy is provided for the violation of the right in that very statute, ordinarily the person whose right is violated is bound to follow the remedy provided in the Act, and a separate suit is barred. ——Statute conferring exceptional powers on single person—Principle of construction—Construction in favour of subject.

In interpreting a statute which confers exceptional powers on an individual officer and takes away from all Courts the right to entertain any objection on any ground whatsoever except on the ground of want of jurisdiction, a doubtful question must be answered in favour of the subject and it must be held that the exceptional power was given only where it is abundantly clear that it was the intention of the Legislature to give it. (Middleton.) RAMAUTAR MAHTON v. CENTRAL CO OPERATIVE BANK. 7 B.R. 686.

——Unambiguous language—Duty of Court.

Where a rule is couched in unambiguous language, it is not open to the Court to alter it merely because, in the Court's opinion, it might produce a somewhat harsh result. Where the language is clear, it is the Court's duty to give effect to it. (Braund, J.) SECRETARY OF STATE v. GOMTI KUNWARI. 195 I.C. 246=14 R.A 23=1941 O.A. (Supp.) 327= 1941 A.W.R. ——Validity of Act—Competence of Legislature—Crucial date—Change of powers of Legislature during passage of Bill from Legislative Assembly to Council of State.

It may sometimes become necessary for a Court to inquire into the proceedings of a Legislature, for the purpose of determining whether an Act was or was not validly passed; for example, whether it was in fact passed, as in the case of the Indian Legislature the law requires, by both chambers of the Legislature before it received the Governor-General's assent. But the form, content or subject-matter of a Bill at the time of its introduction into, or of its consideration by, either chamber of the Legislature is a matter with which a Court of law is not concerned. The question whether either chamber has the right to discuss a Bill laid before it is a domestic matter regulated by the rules of the chamber, as interpreted by its Speaker, and is not a matter with which a Court can interfere, or indeed on which it is entitled to express any opinion. The only function of a Court is to pronounce upon the Bill after it has become an Act. Consequently it is immaterial that the powers of the Legislature changed during the passage of the Bill from the Legislative Assembly to the Council of State. The only date with which the Court is concerned is the date on which the Governor-General's assent was given; and the question whether the Act was or was not within the competence of the Legislature must be determined with reference to that date and to none other. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

———Words—Meaning of—Same meaning to be given to words in Act or section, wherever they appear.

The cancellation of the State subject certificate of the father is no bar to the grant of a fresh certificate to his son in case he can establish by proper evidence that he is entitled to it by possessing the necessary qualifications, but will raise a presumption against him. It will be for him to rebut that presumption by bringing cogent evidence to prove that his father's application failed for want of reliable evidence, which though it did exist, the father failed to produce. The grant or revocation of a State subject certificate is an act of Government and a proceeding of an executive authority, and the powers relating to it can be exercised by the Government or a person or persons to whom this power is delegated by the Government expressly or by necessary implications. Therefore, the Revenue Minister or the Revenue Commissioner, in their capacity as Revenue Officers, cannot exercise any revisional jurisdiction in proceedings arising out of grant or cancellation of a State subject certificate. Notification No. 13-L dated 27th June, 1932, deals specifically with the position of 'emigrants from the Jammu and Kashmir State to foreign territories". Every person who goes abroad and resides there for considerable length of time is not necessarily an emigrant. A person is said to emigrate from his ancestral abode to another if he abandons the former and adopts the latter as his permanent residence. In each case it is a question of fact. A. Notification No. 13-L dated 27th June, 1932, should be taken to deal specifically with the question of emigrants, while Notification No. 1-L/84 dated 20th April, 1927, defines generally the term "state subject." Note 11 appended to the latter merely makes clear that the status of the descendants of a "State subject" is also that of a "State subject". In case a State subject emigrates he and his descendants for two generations will be entitled to the limited privileges therein mentioned. A. K. WATAL, In re. 43 P.L.R. J & K. 166.

In such a case, it is not sufficient that the terms of a compromise are before the Court. There ought to be evidence that the attention of the Court was directly called to the fact that a minor was a party to the compromise and it ought to be shown by an order on petition or in some way not open to doubt, that the leave of the Court was obtained. It is where these two indispensable conditions are fulfilled that a lower Court can draw a statement of facts of the case and the point on which doubt is entertained and then refer the matter to the High Court. It is then open to the defendant to deny that the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between him and the plaintiff. If he succeeds, the plaintiff will be nonsuited. The Sessions Judge has been given power to treat the statement before the committing Magistrate as a piece of substantive evidence on which he may base a conviction if he believes that evidence. The whole object of this section was to give powers to a Sessions Judge to decide which of the two statements made by a witness (one before the committing Magistrate and the other before the Sessions Judge) was true. ——S. 533—Recording of confession—Defects, when curable.

Under S. 533, Cr. P. Code, a defect in form is curable but not a defect in substance. Where a confession was duly recorded after necessary warning but the Magistrate somehow failed to embody that fact in his memorandum, such a defect is certainly curable. It is where the mandatory provisions of S. 164 are not complied with that the defect will be incurable. In such a case, if any warning has not been given the confession should not be held to have been duly made and S. 533 will be wholly inapplicable. The Court should first look into the question whether the defect is purely formal or whether it is a defect in substance. If it is a defect in substance then the confession cannot be admitted in evidence and the provision of S. 533 cannot come to the aid of the prosecution. But if it is a defect purely of a formal nature then the provisions of S. 533 would be applicable by the production of the Magistrate or some other evidence which would remove the formal defect. S. 9 (2) (c) of the Agriculturists' Relief Act does not in any manner affect the "provisions of S. 20 of the Limitation Act." It merely enacts a method in which accounts are to be taken when it becomes necessary to do so. There is no reason for holding that a suit which is barred by limitation because S. 20 of the Limitation Act does not cover it, becomes a suit within limitation because under S. 9 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act a particular method is enacted under which account has to be taken of the payments made by the debtor when that becomes necessary. ———Civil Courts and Courts of special jurisdiction—Powers of.

The powers of a tribunal of special jurisdiction are circumscribed by the statute under which it is constituted. Such tribunal must act within its powers and so long as it does so, its orders whether right or wrong, cannot be challenged. But where and in so far as its actions are in excess or in contravention of the powers conferred on it, they are ultra vires and of no legal effect. Whenever the question arises whether the Court of special jurisdiction has or has not jurisdiction to try a particular cause, then the Court of general jurisdiction, that is the Civil Court, is always the final authority as to whether the cause is or is not within the special jurisdiction of the special tribunal. This principle is, of course, without prejudice to the general principle that all Courts must have inherent jurisdiction to decide whether a certain cause is or is not within their jurisdiction to try. But a Court cannot merely by a wrong exercise of discretion or by a wrong construction of law confer jurisdiction upon itself to try a cause and hence when the question arises as between the special Court and the Court of general jurisdiction as to whether a cause is within the jurisdiction of the special Court or the jurisdiction of the Court of general jurisdiction then the decision of the Court of general jurisdiction must override the decision of the Court of special jurisdiction. In default of conquest or a treaty to the contrary criminal jurisdiction cannot be assumed. With reference to an offence in the Deoli Agency area the only Court of Session lawfully empowered to decide sessions cases or High Court to hear appeals from the Court of Session are the Courts of the Mewar Durbar. A statutory body like a Municipality acting under a statute must keep strictly within its statutory powers. The lack of jurisdiction must be distinguished from the wrong exercise of jurisdiction. While an act done without any power to do so is null and void, an act done in erroneous exercise of that jurisdiction is voidable, that is rectifiable by a superior authority. Where the decision of the statutory body is wrong as distinguished from being beyond its power, the question would arise whether the Civil Court could rectify the wrong. Permanent residence in the hill tracts is not necessary in the case of such tribes. An addition of parties may indeed be made when the persons who desire to be added as parties do not raise any new dispute but want to place other materials before the Court in connection with the dispute that is referred to it by the Collector. ——S. 31 (2)—Acquisition of joint property—One co-sharer receiving entire compensation money - Suit by others for their share—Nature of.

In law all the co-sharers are entitled to enjoy and possess the common property jointly, and if one of them asserts an exclusive title to any portion of such property and ousts his co-sharers from enjoyment or possession of the same, the latter can certainly institute a suit for recovery of joint possession in respect of that particular item without being obliged to sue for partition of the entire joint estate. When a joint property is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, the enjoyment, which the co-owners are entitled to under the Act, is to get proportionate shares of the compensation money that is given by the award. Consequently, if one co-sharer receives anything in excess of his share or the whole amount of the compensation money he is bound to refund it to the true owners, and this is a right which is recognized by the proviso to S. 31 (2). A suit by a co-sharer for his share of the compensation money falls under S. 31 (2) and cannot be regarded as a partition suit. ——S. 31 (2), last proviso—If creates a right.

——S. 32 (1) (b) (ii)—Applicability.

S. 32 (1) (b) (ii) contemplates a case where the disability has ceased or the estate vests absolutely in a full owner after the termination of the limited estate. It presupposes a valid deposit under S. 32 (1) and cannot have any reference to a case where the property is found not to belong either wholly or in part to the person in whose favour the award is made and in whose name the money lies deposited ; but is found to belong to some other person who is not a party to the award at all. ——S. 49—Right under—When available.

S. 49 of the Land Acquisition Act requires that the claimant should be "owner" of the land to be acquired as well as of the house, manufactory or building of which he maintains it to be a part. Unity of ownership is a necessary pre-requisite. (Khundkar and Lodge, JJ.)

It cannot be held that S. 49 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act only applies to houses or buildings. S. 49 (1) applies to acquiring a part of a house, manufactory or other building, and compels the Local Government to acquire the whole of the same if the owner desires it. ——S. 49 (1)—"Owner"—Meaning of.

The expression "owner" which occurs in S. 49 of the Land Acquisition Act is no where defined in the Act, and though the expression "person interested" as explained in S. 3 (b) must obviously include "owner," the connotation of the two terms are by no means coincident. A "person interested" who can not be strictly considered an owner, cannot avail himself of the rights conferred by S. 49. The rights of a zamindar, a tenure-holder, the holder of a building lease, an occupancy raiyat, may conceivably fulfil the conception of ownership within the meaning of S. 49 in certain circumstances. But each case must depend upon its own special facts. (Khundkar and Lodge, JJ.) PROVINCE OF BENGAL v. MAHES MISSER. 45 C W.N. 370 = A.I.R 1941 Cal. 625.

It does not follow because an order apportioning compensation among disputing claimants is not an award or part of an award within the meaning of S. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act that no appeal lies. An appeal would lie though not to the High Court. Where a reference in Land Acquisition proceedings relating to a dispute as to the apportionment of compensation deposited by the Collector under S. 30 of the Land Acquisition Act is transferred by the District Judge to the Assistant Judge under the Sind Courts Act for disposal, the order passed in the case by the Assistant Judge is appealable to the District Judge when the subject-matter of the order does not exceed Rs. 5,000. LAND ACQUISITION (MINES) ACT, S. 3 (1)—Acquisition with reservation of minerals—Minerals, if include laterite—"Common rock" and "vernacular" tests—Meaning and mode of application—Such tests, if alternative or cumulative.

Certain lands were compulsorily acquired for the railway for the purpose of constructing a branch line, and the declaration under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act contained a reservation of "mines of coal, iron-stone, slate and other minerals" in terms of S. 3 (1) of the Land Acquisition (Mines) Act. During the period of construction the railway contractors removed materials including laterite stone and laterite kankar or moorum from the acquired lands, and the owner of the lands filed a suit for compensation for their wrongful removal contending that the materials in suit were minerals within the meaning of the reservation contained in the declaration.

Held, that in order to decide whether or not laterite was a mineral within the meaning of the reservation a double test had to be applied (a) the negative "common rock" test (b) the positive "relevant vernacular" test, that the two tests were not alternative but cumulative, that the common rock test had first to be applied and that the plaintiff could not succeed even if he established the vernacular title of laterite to be a mineral if it did not satisfy the "common rock" test. According to the negative "common rock" test, the substance should not be the ordinary rock of the district but should be exceptional in use, character or value. In order to be excluded from the reservation by the common rock test, it is not necessary that there should be an uninterrupted expanse of the substance extending overthe whole length of the acquired land. If within such land there are substances, however extensive, distinct and distinguishable from the other strata or horizons, this might well exclude such substances from the common rock category. But the mere fact of the ground being in different horizons, distinct as against each other, is not decisive. But depth may be extremely important. The distinction between surface soil and the rock below it, cannot be relied upon to make it exceptional. The "vernacular" test is not really whether the substance can be conveniently or properly dealt with under the heading of "mineral substances" or resources or "minerals" for short. The test is "if you ask any one" whether he will say that the substance comes under the description "mines of coal" etc. and "other minerals"; ' ,any one" being afterwards limited to certain classes in this case to tenantry, land-owners the Crown and the railway (Ameer Ali, J.) MIDNAPUR ZAMINDARI CO., LTD. v. BENGAL NAGPUR RY. LAND IMPROVEMENTS LOANS ACT (XIX OF 1883), S. 7, proviso—Construction—Sale under S. 7 (1) (c)—Mortgage by borrower before loan—If extinguished.

The words of the proviso to S. 7 of the Land Improvements Loans Act clearly mean that the interests of third parties (e.g., the rights of an occupancy tenant) are protected, but that the interest of the borrower and the interest of a mortgagee or charge holder from the mortgagor with regard to the property would be extinguished by a sale under S. 7 (1) (c) even though the mortgage may have been created before the date of the loan. surrender of possession—Market value—Ascertainment—Deduction for depreciation—If to be allowed—Mesne profits—Right of lessor.

Where a lease of a plot of land provides that the lessee "shall always and in any event be entitled to be paid the price of the superstructure built on the said plot of land before he surrenders possession of the land. The price shall be fixed according to the market value of the buildings as at the time of ascertainment and payment," in assessing the amount payable to the lessee at the time of resumption by the lessor, due allowance should be made for depreciation. The circumstance that the lessor would take some time to construct the building and would, during that period, be deprived of the present user and the income derived therefrom, is no valid reason for refusing to make a deduction for depreciation. The market value is only the constructional value of the building and its special letting value cannot be taken into consideration in fixing the value to be paid to the lessee on eviction, in the absence of a contract to the contrary. Where the lessor terminates the lease and tenders a ridiculously low amount as the value of the building, e.g., where he tenders an amount of Rs. 3,000, and the market value is ultimately found to be Rs. 18,000, the lessee's possession after such tender cannot be held to be the possession of a trespasser or wrongful possession, so as to entitle the lessor to claim mesne profits from the date of such tender. When a tenancy is terminable at the will of the tenant it must be held to be terminable at the will of the landlord also. On 30—3—1939, the Bombay Urban Immovable Property Tax came into operation and the question arose whether the tax under that Act fell within this clause in the lease.

Held, (1) that on the true construction of the clause the liability of the lessees was not confined to municipal taxes only, viz., taxes the benefit of which was retained by the Municipality; (2) that the word "dues" had a wider import than the word "rates" or "taxes"; (3) that the Urban Immovable Property Tax was both a tax and a due in respect of the demised premises; and (4) that the lessees were therefore bound to pay that tax. ———Permanent tenancy—Proof—Inference from circumstances—Circumstances justifying.

The origin of a tenancy, which was created before the T. P. Act, was unknown. There was no pucca building upon the land of the tenancy. The rent was not uniform but it was not charged at least for the last 52 years although during that period the price of land had jumped up. There were many transfers of the tenancy—private as well as Court sales—on the footing that it was transferable, and the transferees were recognised by the landlords as tenants. There was at least one instance of succession in the history of the tenancy. Some of the co-sharer landlords admitted the permanent character of the tenancy.

Held, that the above facts and circumstances justified the inference that the tenancy in its inception was permanent. (Nasim Ali and Pal, JJ.) JOGENDRA KRISHNA v. SUBASHINI I.L.R. (1941) 2 Cal. 44= 74 C.L.J. 145=45 C.W.N 590= A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 541.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Former recorded as owner and latter as tenant—Relation of landlord and tenant—If exists between parties.

When a partition of a joint holding takes place and land allotted to one shareholder is found to be in possession of another, the ordinary practice adopted is for the person entitled under the partition proceeding to be recorded as owner, the other members of the proprietary body remaining in possession being recorded as tenants-at-will with or without some note in the rent column explaining that the recorded tenants pay no rent either because they claim to be proprietors in possession or for some other similar reason. In such circumstances the recorded proprietor has a right under S. 122 of the Land Revenue Act to apply to the Revenue Officer who carried out the partition to eject the co-sharers in possession and to place him in possession. After the lapse of three years this remedy is no longer open to the recorded owner though he may still have a remedy under the ordinary law to bring a suit for possession of the land. The relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties. (Alan Mitchell, F.C.) RASIL SINGH v. DHANI RAM.

Held, that as soon as the interest of A came to an end the interest of B as sub-tenant did not survive and B could not subsequently rank as tenant of C. Hence C could not sue B in ejectment as tenant after service of a notice to quit. (Mukherjea, J.) BIRAJA SUNDARI v. MAHAMAYA SEN.

———Rent—Remission—Intention of executive authority—Suit to eject heir of statutory tenant—Withdrawal—Status of tenant—New contract of tenancy, if constituted.

The intention of the executive authority as regards remissions is that if a new tenant wished to take land he should do it on the clear understanding that the unremitted rent was the legal rent payable. If he did not wish to take the land on these terms there was no call on him to do and accordingly he should not receive remissions. Where an ejectment suit against the heir of a statutory tenant is withdrawn and defendant is allowed to remain in possession and become automatically on the expiry of three years, a statutory tenant, though technically this is described as an admission to the tenancy, it does not constitute a new tenancy as contemplated by the executive authority. The plaintiff, a landlord, brought a suit alleging that the land in suit was settled over thirty years ago with the defendants on the undertaking that the defendants would pay rent at the rates prevailing in the district from time to time. No rent had been paid and the plaintiff therefore prayed the Court to settle the rate of rent and for a decree for arrears of rent on such basis. The defendants' plea that the land was rent free was negatived. The defendant also pleaded that the suit as framed was not maintainable, as it was a suit to settle a fair and equitable rent for a holding.

Held, that the suit was really one for arrears of rent and an inquiry had to be held to ascertain what that rent was; and that being the real nature of the suit, it was maintainable in that form. (Harries, C.J. and Fazl Ali, J.) CHINTI KAHARIN v. KRIPA SHANKAR WARRAH.

Where in a suit for rent the defendant pleads payment into Court in obedience to an injunction from a Court but where there is no copy of the injunction on the record, it is unsafe to take for granted the fact of the issue of the injunction and hence the plea fails and rent should be decreed. Similarly where though an injunction not to pay the rent to the zamindar was issued and the tenant was directed to pay the amount into Court, he pays it to the decree-holder in the suit in which the injunction was issued there is no payment as directed by the injunction and hence the payment, if any, cannot be pleaded in defence to a suit for rent. ———Rent—Suspension of—Conditions for application of doctrine—Landlord realising rent of part from sub-tenant in possession under mistake — If entitles tenant to suspension of rent of sub-tenure.

Mere dispossession of the tenant from part of the demised premises is not sufficient to justify a total suspension of rent; in order to apply the doctrine of suspension it must be proved that the landlord deliberately and intentionally evicted the tenant from a part of the demised premises. In a suit for rent of a sub-tenure the defendant pleaded that he had been dispossessed by the plaintiff from a portion of the tenure. It was found that the plaintiff had realised rent for the period in suit in respect of a plot from the tenant in possession who was settled by the defendant. It was, however, found that the plaintiff had realised the rent inadvertently under a mistake and that he did not intend to dispossess the defendant from any part of the sub-tenure.

Held, that it must be held that the purpose of the plaintiff in realising rent from the tenant in possession was not to evict the defendants and his action therefore did not entitle the defendant to a suspension of the rent of the sub-tenure. ———Rent—Suspension—Considerations for Court.

It is not in every case of a lump rental and dispossession from a part, the tenant is at liberty to hold the other lands appertaining to the tenancy rent-free for all time to come. The Court should consider whether the landlord's failure to put the tenant in possession of the entire demised area was due to some mistake as to the extent of the boundaries or some other bona fide act. It has further to consider whether the tenancy is indivisible in the sense that the plots are such that dispossession from one plot necessarily interferes with the enjoyment of the rest. Under the ordinary law of landlord and tenant a tenancy is extinguished when there is abandonment by the tenant followed by possession by the landlord. Anything amounting to abandonment which shows that the landlord has assented to it will amount to surrender by operation of law. This is founded on an implied agreement between the landlord and tenant to take and give a surrender of the holding, the agreement being implied from the actings of the parties. ———Thekadari and cultivatory lease—Distinction—Effect of the presence of conditions as to heritability, transferability and non-liability to ejectment.

The main criterion for distinguishing between a thekadari lease and a cultivatory lease is the fact whether the lessee is given the right of collecting rents from sitting tenants or whether he was given vacant land which he could either cultivate himself or sub-let to others. Where the terms of a lease showed that the land must have been vacant and that it was let for cultivatory purposes and the area concerned was also not too big to make such assumption impossible, it was held that it was a cultivatory lease and that the existence of conditions in the lease as to heritability, transferability and non-liability to ejectment did not necessarily convert it into a thekadari lease, for such rights could be combined with cultivatory leases also. It is a peculiar estate which continues to be the property of its holder under the British rule as it was in pre-British dynasties from ancient times. It was subjected to legislation from time to time under S. 27 of the Bombay Regulation I of 1823 ; the holder of a wanta was recognised as having a legal right to the lands, and possession for thirty years was regarded as proof of a sufficient right of property in the lands comprised in the wanta. The British Government recognised the wanta tenure as well as the right of the holder to the lands included in it; from the history of further inquiry and without taking thumb impression —Disciplinary action.

In an execution case a satisfaction petition was filed purporting to be by the decree-holder. On the petition was a signature alleged to be that of the decree-holder's son, acknowledging satisfaction and also an endorsement of identification of the decree holder by a mukhtar. The petition of satisfaction was found to be a forgery and the judgment-debtor held guilty. The judgment debtor, a sadhu, had been known to the mukhtar for 15 years. The latter came to him and showed him a man who he said was the decree-holder and asked the mukhtar to identify him as such. He was shown the petition of satisfaction which had already been completed and the mukhtar identified the person shown to him as the decree-holder. It was said that the decree-holder was illiterate and could not sign and therefore another person who purported to be his son had signed. The mukhtar did not take the precaution of taking the thumb-impression of the person who was said to be the decree-holder on the judgment-debtor's assurance that he would take his thumb-impression.

Held, that the frank admission by the mukhtar that while identifying he made no further investigation and acted merely upon the assurance of the judgment-debtor must be considered as a point in his favour and though the cases of mukhtars' identifying improperly must be regarded severely and though, in the circumstances, the mukhtar was grossly careless and negligent, the Court could take a more lenient view, because of the mukhtar's past record as a most respectable member of the profession for 23 years and because there was no suggestion that the mukhtar acted as he did for gain or in order to benefit the judgment-debtor in the case, by taking serious notice of the mukhtar's conduct without imposing any punishment by way of suspension. A practitioner who is capable of embezzling money belonging to his client is proved to have such a defect of character, that it is not in the interest either of the profession or of the litigant public with whom he is brought into contact in the course of his profession, that he should continue to occupy the position of privilege which a member of the legal profession enjoys. It is the duty of the Court to protect not only members of the profession, but also those who are brought into contact with the legal practitioners. A man with such a defect of character should have no place in the legal profession and, therefore, the only proper action in proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act against a man convicted of embezzling is to remove him from the rolls altogether. ——(Allahabad), Cl. 30 —Final order—Meaning of—Refusal of temporary injunction—Appealability.

The words 'final order' in Cl. 30 of the Letters Patent are used in the contradistinction to the words 'interlocutory order'. The test to decide whether an order is final is to see whether the rights of the parties have been finally and once for all decided by it. If the effect of the order is not to adjudicate finally the rights of the parties the order cannot be characterised as final. In one sense every order passed by a Court is final so far as that Court is concerned, but the finality of the order contemplated by Cl. 30 is in relation to the rights of the partie. and not with reference to the Court passing the decrees In other words if the effect of the order is to bar a party from seeking redress with respect to the alleged infringement of his rights by a proceeding according to law, the order is final, otherwise it is not. Temporary injunctions are granted to a party or refused in the exercise of powers vested in it by O. 39, C. P. Code and such orders can never bar a party from having resort to procedure prescribed by law for the redress of the infringement of an alleged right. Hence an order refusing a request for the issue of a certain temporary injunction cannot be considered to be a 'final order' as contemplated by Cl. 30, Letters Patent and is not appealable. ——(Bombay), Cl. 10—Powers of High Court—Attorney—Moral delinquency in private character—Contempt of Court in private capacity—Scandalous allegations against Judge in notice under S. 80, C. P. Code —Liability to suspension.

It must not be supposed that a Court of justice has not the power to remove an Attorney if he is unfit to be entrusted with a professional status and character. If an Attorney be found guilty of moral delinquency in his private character, there is no doubt that he may be struck off the Roll. Contempt of Court when committed by an Attorney in a private capacity can be of such a nature as to show professional unfitness. There can be no grosser contempt on the part of an Attorney than to allege that a Judge has acted with prejudice, bias and malice in the course of his judicial duties, that he decided a case not according to his own convictions but to please somebody else and that he abused his powers as a Judge and acted dishonestly and in bad faith. The fact that such allegations are contained in a notice sent by the Attorney under S. 80, C. P. Code, to a Judge in respect of certain remarks made by the Judge in a judgment in a case in which the Attorney was a witness is no ground for holding that no offence is committed. No one by merely filing or threatening to file a suit and calling his communication a notice under S. 80, C. P. Code, can insult and vilify a Judge in that manner. The fact that the scandalous allegations are contained in a notice under S. 80 C. P. Code, cannot therefore prevent them from being contempt of Court, and the Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent which empowers the High Court to remove or suspend from practice advocates, vakils, or attorneys on 'reasonable cause," gives a wide discretion to the Court in regard to the exercise of this disciplinary authority. "Reasonable cause" in the clause means the same as professional or other misconduct under S. 10 of the Bar Councils Act. "Misconduct" is a sufficiently wide expression, it is not necessary that it should involve moral turpitude. Any conduct which in any way renders a man unfit for the exercise of his profession or is likely to hamper or embarrass the administration of justice by the High Court or any of the Courts subordinate thereto may be considered to be misconduct calling for disciplinary action. The 1st defendant drew in Bombay five bills of exchange on the 2nd defendant who was residing at Calicut in the Madras Province in favour of the plaintiffs. LETTERS PATENT (Calcutta), Cl. 15.

The High Court has power and can make an order appointing a guardian in respect of undivided coparcenary property of a minor Hindu coparcener, in respect of a minor situate within the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court, that is, the town and island of Bombay. This jurisdiction extends to minors wherever in the Presidency they may be found, provided they are subjects of the British Crown. The jurisdiction of the High Court to sanction a contract for the benefit of a minor extends to a minor Hindu coparcener resident within the Bombay Presidency, who is a British subject. Where the manager of a joint Hindu family comes to Court and asks it to sanction a sale of joint family property including the interests of the minor coparcener, as being for the benefit of the minor, the Court ought not to make an order ex parte. The minor concerned should be made a respondent to the application, and he should be represented by a guardian ad litem, who should normally be an officer of the Court, and he should satisfy himself as to the interest of the minor, by requiring further evidence as to the alleged necessity for the sale or as to the price being a good one, and as to how the proceeds of the sale are to be dealt with. The presentation of a plaint to a Court which has no jurisdiction to try the suit cannot be said to be the institution of the suit, even though the plaint has been accepted as being in order and registered. But when a plaint is presented to a Court having jurisdiction and that Court accepts the plaint as being in order, it must be held that the suit has been instituted. Merely because at some later stage, as the result of a finding on the value of the subject-matter of the suit, it is found that the plaint should have been presented to another Court having jurisdiction and that the plaint is returned for presentation to that Court, it does not mean that the suit has not been instituted. And when a plaint has been so returned and re-presented to the Court having jurisdiction, the date of institution of the suit is the date on which the plaint was originally presented and not the date on which it was re-presented. She then made an adoption to her deceased husband, but the adopted son died unmarried in 1918 in his twenties. In 1934, she adopted the plaintiff who brought a suit to recover possession of the lands alienated on the ground that the alienations by the widow, his adoptive mother, were not for legal necessity. The defendants raised the plea of limitation

Held, that the effect of Ss. 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the Limitation Act was to bar the plaintiff's right to sue, whether or not the previously adopted son died a major or a minor. Since the right of the former adopted son was barred by limitation, time having already run against him, no further right to sue in respect of the alienations could accrue to the plaintiff. LIMITATION ACT (1908), S. 7.

S. 7 does not apply to a case where a suit is brought by a Hindu father as the manager of a joint family to recover a debt due to the joint family and in which the father and manager unnecessarily joins his minor son as co-planitiff, appointing himself as next friend of the minor son. The section is intended to apply to a case where each of the several persons is jointly entitled to file a suit. The father as manager is alone entitled to institute a suit. The minor has no right to interfere in the management of the joint family affairs including the institution of a suit. If it is clear that the suit is one brought by the father as manager of the joint family for a debt due to the joint family, the fact that he quite unnecessarily chooses to join his minor son as a co-plaintiff and to appoint himself as next friend, cannot make any difference to the law of limitation and time would not be extended by S 7 of the Limitation Act. It cannot be said that the father is not in a position to give a valid discharge for himself and for the minor whom he represents so as to entitle the minor son to the extended period of limitation. On 14—1—1913, K, the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad executed a deed of gift of certain properties belonging to the tarwad in favour of his own children. He signed it as karnavan and as guardian of the plaintiff (1st respondent) who was then a minor The 2nd respondent who was the only other member of the tarwad and an adult, also signed the deed. The gift was found to be a fraud on the tarwad and it was found that the 2nd respondent was the victim of a fraud practised by the karnavan K. K died in 1919, and since then the 2nd respondent was the karnavan of the tarwad, but the latter did not file any suit to set aside the gift deed. The 1st respondent plaintiff became a major on 28—10—1927 and on 14—10—1930, brought a suit to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the properties from the alienees under the deed of gift.

Held, that the 2nd respondent, when the latter became karnavan, was in a position to give a discharge on behalf of the tarwad and therefore time ran against the 1st respondent also. The suit having been brought more than 12 years after the date of the gift was therefore barred and not saved by S. 7 of the Limitation Act. (Leach, C.J. and Happell, J.) DEVAKI v. KANNAN.

——S. 7—Scope of—Brothers forming joint Hindu family- Suit challenging alienation by mother—Limitation.

In all cases to which S. 7 of the Limitation Act strictly applies, the section bars a suit by a younger minor member of a joint Hindu family in a case where an elder brother having become a major and having therefore also become a manager of the joint family, has failed to institute a suit within the period of limitation applicable to him. Where a Hindu mother alienated certain family property during the minority of her two sons, it was held, that the right of the two sons forming a joint Hindu family to question the alienation was a right jointly enjoyed by them and they were jointly entitled to institute a suit for that purpose and that as there was no justification for holding that the manager of the family was not capable of giving a discharge or release of the right to institute such a suit, on the failure of the elder brother manager to institute a suit within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit by him, the right of suit for the recovery of the property became barred not only against the elder brother but also against the other member and that it could not be said that the younger brother had a separate individual right to institute such a suit. In order to invoke the application of S. 10 of the Limitation Act, the property must be vested in a trustee or trustees for a specific purpose. A person claiming adversely to the trust and on the footing that the trust deed itself was bad cannot contend that the property was held by the trustees for any purpose. Where a person claiming to be an heir of the settlor and to be entitled to the property on the ground that the trust deed was void and that as an heir of the settlor he is entitled along with the other heirs to recover the property from the trustees, S. 10 of the Limitation Act does not apply. A, a Mahomedan, executed on 29—10—1895 a deed of wakf or trust under which the trustees were to pay the income of the property to the settlor during his lifetime and after his death to the beneficiaries mentioned in the deed. A died on 7—6—1897. Ever since then the trustees administered the property as trustees under the deed of trust and held the property for the beneficiaries paying the income to the beneficiaries. On 28—3—1938, the plaintiff claiming to be an heir's heir of the settlor brought a suit for a declaration that the deed of trust was void and inoperative, that the trustees should be ordered to deliver up the property to him and the other heirs, and the trust deed for cancellation and for an account of their management of the property.

Held, that S. 10, Limitation Act, did not apply to the suit as the plaintiff could not be said to be a person claiming against a trustee holding the property for an express trust, and the suit was time barred. (Kania, J.) FIDAHUSSEIN KADERBHAI v. TYABALLY EUSUFALLY.

——S. 10—Applicability — "Specific purpose"—Meaning of—Nattukottai Chetties — Money deposited with person at time of marriage of daughter—If express trust created in favour of children of marriage.

The phrase "trust for a specific purpose" in S. 10 of the Limitation Act is only a more expanded mode of constituting express trust in English law. The plaintiff and the defendant were members of the Nattukottai Chetty community. The 1st plaintiff married the sister of the defendant. At the time of the marriage, the father-in-law of the plaintiff, S. A. A. A. Chetty, provided a sum of money as his daughter's stridhanam, and out of the amount provided, a sum of Rs. 2045-2-0 was deposited in May, 1919, with the defendant in the name of the 1st plaintiff to the order of S.A.A. The defendant was aware of the nature of the money, its source, and the purpose for which it was being deposited, namely to earn interest and be augmented for the benefit of the children of the marriage, according to the custom of the community. An additional sum of Rs. 447, being the share of the 1st plaintiff's wife in her mother's property, was similarly deposited with the defendant in July, 1921. S.A A., the maraldar, died in 1926, and the 1st plaintiff's minor daughter, the 2nd plaintiff became entitled to the amount; the 1st plaintiff's wife died in 1939. Demands were made but were not complied with, and the plaintiffs sued the defendant for recovery of the amounts.

Held, that the defendant, in the circumstances, became and remained a trustee of the amounts deposited with him, for a specific purpose, namely, of interest being earned and the total fund being increased for the benefit of the children of the 1st plaintiff and his wife; that S. 10 of the Limitation Act applied to the case and enabled the 2nd plaintiff to recover the amounts without any bar of limitation. Where plaintiffs called administrators of certain trust property dedicated by will, entrusted the property to the defendants for safe custody and management and eventual return and later on sued the defendants for profits for a period of 11 years it was held that S. 10 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case and that a mere custodian or manager of property handed over to him by the legal or de facto manager could not be reached by the section and that the suit would be governed by the ordinary rule of limitation. The entrustment of the property to the defendants would not make them "managers" within the meaning of S. 10, Limitation Act. But if he does not put in the application for a copy till after the decree has been signed, he cannot be said to have exercised due diligence and caution, and in that case the period which elapses between the date of the judgment and the date of the signing of the decree cannot be considered to be the time requisite for obtaining the copies. S. 12 (2) of the Limitation Act is applicable to an application under S. 73 of the Madras Village Courts Act preferred to the Court of a District Munsif against an ex parte decree of a Village Panchayat Court. For the purposes of S. 12 (2) the application to the District Munsif has to be treated as an appeal and the time requisite to apply for and obtain a copy of the decree of the Panchayat Court can be excluded in computing the period of limitation for filing the application to the District Munsif under S. 73 of the Village Courts Act. Though S. 73 does not require an applicant to produce along with his petition a certified copy of the decree to which he takes exception, S. 12 (2) of the Limitation Act still applies, because S. 12 (2) is applicable even to a case where the appeal or application need not be accompained by a copy of the decree objected to (Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.) STANDARD TYPE FOUNDRY v. VENKATARAMANIAH

On March 20th, the copying department notified that further folios and stamps would be required. Where the next friend of a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the suit stands stayed or in abeyance under O. 32, R. 10, C. P. Code, the right to apply for a final decree in such a suit is suspended, and the period during which the suit stands stayed ought to be excluded in computing the period of limitation to apply for a final decree. S. 15 of the Limitation Act in terms does not apply, but the principle of the section ought to be applied. Plaintiffs 1 and 2, the latter a minor, filed a suit on a mortgage, plaintiff No. 1, acting as next friend of his minor brother, second plaintiff. On 20th February, 1925, a preliminary decree was passed. In January, 1927, the first plaintiff died, and no next friend was appointed for the second plaintiff. All further proceedings in the suit were therefore stayed for the time being. The second plaintiff attained majority on 12th April, 1933, and he died on 13th September, 1933. The first plaintiff's widow made an adoption in June, 1933, and in July, 1934, the adopted son, as the legal representative and heir of the plaintiffs applied for a final decree. It was pleaded that the application was barred under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act.

LIMITATION ACT (1908), S. 19.

Held, that it was unjust that time to make an application in a suit should continue to run during a period when the suit has been stayed by statute and no application is possible; that since the suit was in abeyance by virtue of O. 32, R. 10, C. P. Code, on the death of the first plaintiff, the right to apply for a final decree was suspended during the period in which the suit was stayed and, deducting that period, the application was in time (*Beaumont, C. S. 15 of the Limitation Act operates on the periods of limitation prescribed by the Bihar Tenancy Act, by reason of the combined operation of subSs. (1) and (2) of S. 185 of the Bihar Tenancy Act. Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bihar Tenancy Act which prescribes a period of three years from the date of the decree has to be read with S. 15 of the Limitation Act. The decree in a rent suit was passed on a compromise and the compromise provided that the decree should not be executed until the decision in a title suit, then pending was given. The application for execution was filed within three years of the decision in the title suit but more than three years after the rent decree.

Held, that the petition of compromise containing the stipulation that the rent decree should not be executed until the decision in the title suit was a part of the decree in the rent suit, and must be regarded as an order staying the execution of the decree till the date of the decision of the title suit, and the application was therefore in time. When there is a bond or note under which a considerable sum is due and the debtor makes towards that bond a payment which is clearly less than the balance due, accompanying the payment with an endorsement to the effect that it is towards the debt in the bond or towards the note, it is legitimate to read the words of that endorsement together with the substance of the document upon which the indorsement is made and infer from the circumstances the fact that the writing of this endorsement is an acknowledgment of the subsistence of the debt after the payment endorsed, although such a payment being an open payment or unappropriated payment cannot avail the creditor under S. 20 of the Limitation Act as a payment towards interest as such or towards principal saving limitation (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) RAMAYYA v. ANJAYYA. 54 L.W. 624 = (1941) 2 M.L.J. 848.

——S. 19—Applicability—Acknowledgment of liability—What constitutes—Acknowledgment of liability of particular debt—Necessity for.

Before S. 19 of the Limitation Act can apply, there must be words which clearly indicate an acknowledgment of liability of the particular debt. It is not for the Court to overstrain the meaning of the words used; there is no warrant for holding that unless the words used amount to a total repudiation of liability they should be read as an acknowledgment. S mortgaged his property to M on 9—8—1921 for Rs. 5,000. Where after the death of a mortgagor, who was a Mahomedan, some of the heirs owning 14 as. share of the property mortgaged executed sale deeds of the equity of redemption in the property in respect of their shares therein, thereby acknowledging the mortgage debt, but the remaining heir, owning the remaining 2 as. share did not make any acknowledgment, it cannot be held that the acknowledgment by some heirs does not avail to save limitation and therefore the whole suit is barred by limitation. As a general rule a mortgage contract is indivisible, but in a case where the parties are Mahomedans, the share of each of the heirs of the original mortgagor is defined by law (i.e., the Mahomedan law), and therefore although the suit is barred with regard to the 2 as. share of the heir who has not acknowledged, it cannot be held to be barred as to the remaining 14 as. share in respect of which there have been acknowledgments within the period of limitation. In a case where two remedies flow either by operation of law or by agreement between the parties out of one and the same transaction, and the remedies are distinct and separate in their scope and in their essential features, anything said or done to save one of the remedies from the bar of limitation cannot operate by itself to save the other also. Where a vendee of immovable property executes a promissory note to the vendor for the balance of the sale price due to the vendor, acknowledgments of liability evidenced by endorsements made on the promissory note cannot be treated as acknowledgments of liability in respect of the vendor's lien for the portion of the purchase-money which is due, so as to save limitation to file a suit to enforce claim on the lien as against the immovable properties. Leach. C.J. and King, J. (Patanjali Sastri, diss.)—Where a mortgagee undertakes as a part of the consideration for the mortgage to discharge a debt due by the mortgagor, he cannot be deemed to have authority to make a payment of interest or a part payment of principal, for purposes of S. 20 of the Limitation Act. Whether there is authority to make a part payment is a question of fact. Of course, if the person who is to make the payment is left a discretion in the matter, his principal will have to suffer the consequences of a payment to account, if the conditions of S. 20 for the saving of limitation are also complied with. Where the mortgagee is directed to pay in full the debt due by the mortgagor, it cannot be said that there is any discretion left to the mortgagee in the matter. A creditor has the right to appropriate a payment made by the debtor without instructions towards the principal, if he so likes, but if the creditor wants to save limitation the appropriation must have been made within the period of limitation and the fact that the appropriation has so been made within the period of limitation can appear from the account books of the creditor. Per Pal, J.—Under S. 20 of the Limitation Act, the authority of the agent may even be implied from the facts and circumstances of the loan. The section does not require any formal authorisation. Where a common manager appointed under S. 95 of the B. T. Act incurs a debt and it is agreed between him and the proprietors that he should pay off the debt out of the assets of the estate under his management, an authority is implied from the proprietors to the common manager to pay the interest on their behalf as it becomes due, and this is sufficient to make the payments of interest by him effective under S. 20 of the Limitation Act so as to save limitation against the proprietors. The fact that the payments are debited in the common manager's books to the accounts of some of the proprietors only and are stated there as on the requisition of these proprietors, will not affect the position in the absence of any evidence that while making these payments to the creditor the common manager did so with any such reservation. —— S. 20—Construction—Payment and indorsement by mortgagor after parting with property—It saves limitation against purchaser of equity of redemption.

S. 20 of the Limitation Act does not require, unlike S. 19, that interest or part of the principal should be paid by the party against whom the debt or legacy is claimed or by the person through whom he derives title or liability, but enacts simply that a fresh period of limitation shall be computed where interest or part of the principal has been paid by the person liable to pay or by the debtor. The right of suit is saved in its integrity against all the persons who might have been sued within the prescribed period A payment and endorsement by a mortgagor who has parted with the mortgaged property but is personally liable to pay on his covenant would therefore save limitation against the prior purchaser of the equity of redemption. ——S. 20 (2)—Applicability—Mortgagee in possession after preliminary decree under invalid contract of sale—Receipt of rents and profits—If saves limitation for application for final decree.

On 8th April, 1926, the appellant obtained a preliminary decree in a suit on his mortgage against one M and his sons. A period of six months was allowed for redemption by the decree. The respondent had obtained a money decree against the mortgagors and had also attached the equity of redemption in the mortgaged properties and he was as such made a party to the mortgage suit. The attachment was continuing at the time of the preliminary decree. In July, 1926, the mortgagors conveyed the mortgaged properties to the appellant in satisfaction of the mortgage debt and the appellant went into possession. The respondent in the meanwhile brought the properties to sale in execution of the decree, purchased them himself subject to the appellant's mortgage, and dispossessed the appellant in 1932. On 27th October, 1933, the appellant filed an application for a final decree for sale; the respondent pleaded limitation.

Held, that the fact that the sale in favour of the appellant proved to be invalid could not vitiate his title as mortgagee and the rents and profits which he received while in possession under the contract sale must, in the circumstances, be deemed to have been received by him as mortgagee. The appellant must therefore be deemed to have been in possession as mortgagee and therefore S. 20 (2) of the Limitation Act applied with the result that his application for final decree made on 27th October, 1937, was in time.

Held, further, that S. 20 operates to extend the time for the filing of an application for a final decree. (Leach, C.J and Happell, J.) DORAISAMI NAICKEN v. PERIA KARUPPAN CHETTIAR. I.L.R. (1941) Mad. 739 = 1941 M.W.N. 289 = 53 L.W. 348 = A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 475 = (1941) 1 M.L J. 388.

——S. 20 (2)—Applicability—Usufructuary mortgage—Final decree in suit on—Appropriation of income by mortgagee in possession—If saves limitation for execution of decree on mortgage.

LIMITATION ACT (1908), S. 20.

The receipt of rent by a mortgagee in possession is not payment by the mortgagor in the ordinary sense of the word. S. 20 of the Limitation Act, however, says that it shall be deemed to be payment, because the mortgagor has himself consented to it in his contract with the mortgagee. It is thus an acknowledgment, continuously repeated so long as the contract is in force, by the mortgagor of the mortgagee's claim under the mortgage. But the final decree in a suit on such mortgage puts an end to the contract, and in regard to payment substitutes new terms to regulate the rights of the parties. It is no longer open to the mortgagee, who has become the decree-holder to appropriate the income of the mortgaged property towards his interest. That interest is limited to 6 per cent. and he must recover it by sale of the mortgaged property. If he remains in possession and appropriates to himself the income of the mortgaged properties, that is no longer an action to which the mortgagor, who is now the judgment-debtor, has consented, —and is therefore in no sense any acknowledgment by him. S. 20 of the Limitation Act cannot successfully be called in aid to save the bar of limitation, for purposes of execution of the decree. (King, J.) KESAVAN CHETTIAR v. RAMASWAMI CHETTIAR.

——S. 20 (2)—Applicability—Usufructuary mortgagee in possession after final decree—Receipt of profits—If saves limitation.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee remains in possession after a final decree on the mortgage has been passed, receipts by him of the profits must be treated as receipts by way of interest and each receipt starts a fresh period of limitation for an application for execution of the decree. Where in the same suit first one legal representative and then another is impleaded, the estate which is the object of the suit has been represented throughout, and there is no change of party in the real sense of the word, so as to invoke the operation of S. 22 of the Limitation Act. Petitioner filed a suit on the last day of limitation to recover a sum of money due to him from the estate of R, deceased, making the widow of R defendant to the suit and claiming a decree against the assets of R in the hands of the defendant widow while the suit was pending, the petitioner learnt that R had left a will under which two persons were appointed executors of his estate and he therefore applied to have those two persons also impleaded as defendants to the suit.

——S. 26—Easement of prescription—Enjoyment of right within two years of suit—When and when not necessary.

It is only when a person claims an easement under the provisions of S. 26 of the Limitation Act that he must show that the period of 20 years' enjoyment of the right extended up to a time within two years of the suit. An easement by prescription or long user can, however, be acquired otherwise than by the aid of that section, for instance, a person can show that he has enjoyed a right of easement from time immemorial in such a way as to lead to the presumption of a grant of such right. In such a case, it would not be necessary for him to show that he enjoyed the right till within two years of the suit (Sen, J.) ABDUL HAMID v. AHMED ALI. 45 C.W.N. 486.

——S. 28—Scope and effect of—Adverse possession—Nature of rights acquired by.

Twelve years' adverse possession of land by a wrongdoer not only bars the remedy of the real owner and extinguishes his title, but confers a title on the person in possession. That goes to the length that the title of the real owner who had been dispossessed cannot even revive if, at a later date, he re-acquires possession. S. 28, Limitation Act, not only deprives the real owner of his right in the property but transfers it to the person who has successfully set up his adverse possession under the statute. Where a person remains in uninterrupted and unexplained possession and there is no indication of the capacity in which he was in possession then prima facie his possession must be presumed to be possession with an intention to claim the full rights of a proprietor. ——S. 29—Scope and effect of amendment of 1922—Meaning of expression 'the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply.'

The rest of the provisions remain as before applicable only when they are expressly included. The expression 'the remaining provisions of the Act shall not apply' in the amended S. 29 simply means that they are not to apply pro prio vigore that is merely by virtue of the Limitation Act itself and that if they are to apply, the grounds for applying them must be found in the special or local Act itself. The law relating to common carriers in India is contained in the Carriers Act and the definition of "common carrier" in S. 2 of that Act excludes the Government from that category. Art. 30 of the Limitation Act which applies to "carriers" does not, therefore, apply to a suit against the Government relating to carriage by railway. Art. 115 is the appropriate article. ——Art. 47—"Final order"—Proceedings under S. 145, Cr P. Code—Revision by High Court—Suit to contest—Limitation—Starting point—Date of order by Magistrate or date of order in revision.

There is no reason why an order passed by the High Court in the exercise of its power of revision under S. 439, Cr. P. Code, should not be regarded as a final order within the meaning Art. 47 of the Limitation Act whether the High Court ultimately interferes in revision or not, its order is none the less a final order. Where in proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, a Magistrate passes an order against which an application in revision is filed under S. 435, Cr. P. Code, before the Sessions Judge, who makes a reference to the High Court under S. 438, Cr. P. Code, with a recommendation that the magistrate's order should be set aside, the matter remains sub judice so long as it is not finally determined by the High Court. The order passed by the High Court under S. 439, Cr. P. Code, is the final order in the case for purposes of Art. 47, Limitation Act, and limitation for a suit in the Civil Court runs from that date and not from the date of the order of the Magistrate although the High Court discharges the reference. The final order in Col. 3 of Art. 47, Limitation Act, must be understood to refer to the order contemplated by Col. 1 of the same article.

——Arts. 57 and 96—Applicability—Banker and customer—Customer drawing cheques on bank without funds to his credit—Banking honouring same through carelessness of clerk or officer—No evidence of misapprehension of their being any security—Limitation for suit.

Where a customer of a bank draws cheques on it knowing that the funds to his credit are not sufficient to them but expecting the bank nevertheless to honour them, he impliedly applies to the bank for an overdraft or a loan. A suit for recovery of the amounts due by the customer in such a case is governed by Art. 57 of the Limitation Act and must be instituted within three years from the date on which the earliest of the various sums paid to the customer or to his orders in respect of the cheques so drawn. The mere fact that some clerk or officer of the bank has been careless in honouring cheques drawn by the customer when presented for payment would not make the moneys paid under a mistake so as to mark Art. 96 of the Limitation Act applicable to the suit for recovery of such sums, when there is no evidence to show that the manager was or could have been under any misapprehension that the amounts were covered by security, especially when the customer had been a customer for a very considerable time and was a man in a large way of business. Art. 96 would only apply to a case where money is paid to another under the influence of a mistake, that is, upon a supposition that a specific fact is true, which would entitle the other to the money, but which fact is untrue, and the money would not have been paid if it had been known to the prayer that the fact was untrue. On 9—1—1925, two brothers A and B sold certain immovable properties to K who in part discharge of the sale price executed a promissory note in favour of C, the wife of A. C subsequently quarrelled with A and left him, and on 5—11—1931, fraudulently endorsed the promissory note to D without consideration and with the object of defeating A and B. In 1932, D, who was an endorsee with full knowledge of all the facts brought a suit and got a decree on 19—7—1933. This decree was set aside on appeal, and the suit was remanded for evidence on 9—8—1934. On 26—11—1934 a fresh decree was passed in favour of D. On 26—11—1937, A and B filed a suit against C and D, to recover the amount of the decree which D had recovered from K.

Held, that the suit was not a suit for money had and received falling under Art. 62 of the Limitation Act, but that the real claim was against D in whose hands were the moneys paid in discharge of the promissory note in favour of C who was a benamidar for A and B. The relationship between a benamidar and the real owner was in the nature of a trust, and the suit was governed by Art. 120 and was in time as there was an equitable claim, and A and B were entitled to trace the proceeds of the sale in the hands of D, C being a trustee for A and B. Certain properties were put up for sale in execution of a decree obtained by the appellant and purchased by the plaintiff's predecessor in-title and the purchase money was paid over to the decree-holder on 12-3—1925. Subsequently a mortgagee of the property whose claim had been rejected filed a suit to set aside the claim order making the purchaser a party to the suit and the suit was decreed on 4—12—1926, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no interest on the property. On 12—6—1928 the plaintiff filed a suit to recover from the decree holder the money which he had paid for the property at the auction.

Held, (1) that the fundamental basis of the claim made by the plaintiff was the existence of a mistake as to the true state of affairs regarding the property and its title, and therefore the suit fell under Art 96 and not Art. 62 of the Limitation Act; (2) that time began to run only when the mistake became known to the plaintiff, i.e., 4—12—1926, the date of the decree in the claim suit, and the suit being within three years of that date was in time. Where an ordinary unregistered money bond provides for repayment of the principal with interest after a specified period and further provides that interest is payable annually and in default, the creditor was entitled to sue for the entire amount due without waiting for the expiry of the period specified in the bond, the bond is a single bond, notwithstanding the default clause. The period of limitation for instituting a suit on such a bond, runs from the date specified for payment as prescribed by Art. 66 of Limitation Act. Time does not run from the date of the first default in payment of interest, nor does the whole amount of the bond become payable on that date so as there and then to induce the application of Art. 80 of the Limitation Act. It is doubtful if Art. 68 would apply to such a case. Though the bond contains a condition, it is not one which relates to the whole sum due on the bond. Art. 68 applies rather to bonds of the nature of security bonds. The bond in question could not be called instalment bonds and it is only in the case of an instalment bond to which Art. 75 applies that time begins to run from the date when the default is made. ——Arts. 74 and 75—Relative scope of—Tendency of Courts with reference to option of waiver—Subsequent defaults how affected.

When a debt is payable by instalments and there is no default provision, a new cause of action arises upon each default and the plaintiff can recover in respect of instalments falling due within three years before suit, vide Art. 74, Limitation Act. But if there is a default provision, Art 74 cannot be relied upon, and under Art. 75 if the plaintiff sues more than three years from the first default and there is no waiver, the suit is totally time barred, that is he cannot recover even those instalments which fell due within three years of suit. But the chief Court of Oudh is in favour of interpreting any facts which can possibly be so interpreted as favouring the view that the creditor has waived the exercise of the option on the first instalment when he bases his suit on subsequent defaults which are within limitation and does not seek to found his cause of action on the earlier defaults The principle which holds good in regard to the first exercise of the option under the default clause holds equally good in respect of a claim founded on subsequent defaults. ——Art. 85—Applicability—Mutual open and current account—Meaning of—Banker and customer—Customer drawing money on various occasions by cheques but making only two payments towards interest due on overdraft — Nature of account — Limitation for suit.

A mutual, open and current account within the meaning of Art. 85 of the Limitation Act is a course of dealing where each party furnishes credit to the other on the reliance that on settlement the accounts will be allowed, so that one will reduce the balance due on the other. To be mutual, there must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other and not merely transactions which create obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations where a depositor borrows money from a bank by means of overdrafts and occasionally deposits money, which is applied to the overdrafts, the transaction is not a mutual account under Art. 85; where various sums were paid by the Bank to the depositor or customer or to persons who presented cheques drawn on the bank by the customer, and during the same period the customer makes to the bank only two payments which are credited towards reduction of the interest due on the overdraft, the account is nothing more than a loan transaction and it doos not fall under Art. 85 of the Limitation Act. By a document dated 16th June 1923, a Mahomedan transferred some land to his wife in lieu of amount of dower money due to her. He promised in the document to get a mutation attested in her favour. He however failed to get the document registered and to have a mutation duly attested and died in 1934. On 15th May, 1936, a mutation was entered to give effect to the document of 16th June, 1923. On 6th December, 1936, the document was shown to the Revenue Officer. But the step-sons of the widow objected to the attestation of the mutation which was therefore rejected. On 18th October, 1938, the widow brought a suit against her step-sons for possession of the land and asked in the alternative for recovery of Rs. 2,000, her dower money.

Held, that the transfer of the land to the woman was perfectly valid to begin with and hence Art. 97 applied to the suit inasmuch as the husband might have registered the document and got a mutation attested. The cause of action accrued to the plaintiff when the mutation was rejected and the suit was, therefore, within time. (Mir Ahmad and Soofi, JJ.) BEGAM JAN v. MALIK AMAN. 195 I.C. 844=14 R. Under Mahomedan Law a divorce by means of a written deed is valid if communicated to the wife. Art. 106 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit by a legal representative of a deceased partner for accounts of the partnership business which was carried on by the surviving partners after the death of the partner. The right of the legal representative is not a right to a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership within the meaning of that article, but is a right accruing to him by the subsequent dealing with the assets belonging to the deceased partner. The business of a partnership formed for running a chit fund, with the partnership as the stake-holder, does not cease or terminate with the expiry of the chit period or earlier if the auction of chits every month comes to an end earlier for other reasons. Where a patni was sold for arrears of rent but the sale is subsequently set aside and the patnidar is restored to possession, the patnidar takes back the patni subject to the obligation to pay the amount of rent which was in arrears. The amount of rent does not accrue until the sale of the patni is set aside and until that time the statute does not run. A suit for the recovery of the arrears of rent for which the patni was sold brought within three years from the date when the patni sale was set aside and the patnidar was restored to possession is, therefore, within time under Art. 110 of the Limitation Act. The plaintiff owed money to P on two mortgages and two hand-notes. He executed a sale-deed in favour of the defendant, the consideration for which was left with the latter for payment to P. Defendant failed to pay to P in spite of demand and the plaintiff himself paid off the hand-notes in March, 1929. Plaintiff instituted a suit in September, 1935, to recover the unpaid consideration money for the sale-deed.

Held, that the consideration for the sale-deed could not be split up into two parts, namely, the amount payable on the hand-notes and the amount payable on the mortgages of P, that as the mortgage debts had fallen due prior to the execution of the sale-deed there was a breach on the part of the defendant to pay the consideration money for the sale-deed when they declined to pay the debt on the hand-notes, that as there was an express agreement to pay the consideration money and as that agreement was contained in a registered document the period of limitation was that provided by Art. 111 read with Art. 116 of the Limitation Act, namely, six years, and that as time ran at the latest from March, 1929, the suit was barred.

Held, further, that even if the suit could be regarded as one on a contract of indemnity to which Art. 83 would apply, the suit was barred as the plaintiff was damnified in March, 1929, which was more than three years prior to the suit. ——Art. 120—Applicability—Right to conduct festival in temple—Dispute between Vadagalais and Tengalais—Former getting order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, against latter—Festival not performed from 1914 to 1927—Subsequent order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, in 1930—Suit by Thengalais in 1930 to declare illegal—It barred.

The Thengalais, of whom the appellant was one, possessed and exercised the right to conduct a certain festival in a temple up to 1909; the Vadagalais, to which sect the respondents belonged, exercised that right from 1910 to 1914. At the instance of the Vadagalais an order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, was passed on 19—12—1914, restraining the Thengalais from interfering with the Vadagalais in the conduct of the festival. This order was in fact effective only for 19 days. The festival was not performed during the period from 1914 to 1927 and neither party was able to set up a claim against the other during this period. On 3—1—1930, the appellant filed a suit for a declaration that an order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, which the respondents had obtained that day from a Magistrate was illegal and that the Vadagalais were not entitled to exercise any right in connect on with the temple to the exclusion of the Thengalais. The respondents—Vadagalais—who had conducted the festival in 1929-1930 pleaded limitation on the ground that the suit had not been instituted within 9 years of 19—12—1914 the date of the prior order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, and this plea was upheld by the High Court in second appeal, holding that Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applied to the case.

Held, on Letters Patent appeal, that the Vadagalais had not obtained any prescriptive right to conduct the festival and their interference with the right of the Thengalais to hold the festival was not sufficiently long to give them any title; the infringement being a recurring one, the Thengalais did not lose their right merely because they did not file a suit in respect of the first infringement Being a recurring infringement the appellant could take action whenever he desired so long as the respondents had not acquired a right by adverse possession.

Held, further, that an order under S. 144, Cr.P.Code, could, at the most, be effective only for 2 months, and the order in this case, passed on 19—12—1914 was effective only for 19 days and did not interfere with the rights of the Thengalais for thirteen years from 1914 to

Art. 120 does not apply to such a suit. A suit brought within 12 years of the Secretary of State's refusal to recognise the validity of the plaintiff's claim would be in time. The plaint presumed that Government remained in possession until 1929 when the defendant by means of an encroachment trespassed thereon.

Held, that the suit was governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, and that when once title was proved to have vested in Government by reason of the fact that the land in suit was part of a public street owned by Government in 1871, the onus shifted on to the person challenging that title to prove that he had subsequently acquired a title by adverse possession and that it was not necessary for Government to prove continued possession because in the circumstances of the case possession would follow title. S. 146-A of the Limitation Act applies only where the local authority suing has been dispossessed or has discontinued its possession : in other words, it contemplates prior possession of the land by the local authority which it subsequently loses by reason of any act done by the defendant or otherwise. The article can obviously have no operation in a case where the local authority is found not to have been in possession at all. Where at the date the Union Board was created, possession of the land was with the defendant, and the Union Board seeks to recover the land as part of a public road to which it became entitled upon its creation under the Act of its incorporation, it must sue for such recovery within 12 years from the date of its establishment under Art. 144. The law of limitation applicable to a suit is the law in force at the time of the institution of the suit. But this general rule is subject to the proviso that neither the right to the property in question has been extinguished nor the right to sue in respect of it barred before the later law came into force. Once a right to property has been extinguished, or right of suit barred, it cannot be revived by subsequent Limitation Acts in the absence of express words so providing. Three Mahomedan brothers owned an eight annas share in a village. In October, LIMITATION ACT (1908), Art. 148.

1791, some of the descendants of the three brothers mortgaged this to one N in 1849. One of the persons interested in the mortgaged property filed a redemption suit in which the pleader for the mortgagee defendant filed a statement of account of the mortgaged property in 1849, signed by him. Nothing further was known about the suit. In 1863, another interested party, the father of one of the defendants filed a suit to redeem a portion of the mortgaged property from the son of the original mortgagee. A decree for redemption was passed, but no time was fixed for payment and there was no provision for foreclosure. It was confirmed on appeal and in second appeal by the descendant of the original mortgagee in 1867 the existence of the mortgage and the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties was admitted as subsisting in the memorandum of second appeal which was signed by the pleader of the appellant therein. The appeal was dismissed, but nothing was done. In 1893, a bolkhat of the property was prepared and the mortgagees were continued to be shown in that register from 1893 to 1913 In 1921 and 1922 a fractional share of the property was sold by the descendants of the original mortgagee to two persons, purporting to sell as owners. In 1933 some of the other descendants of the original mortgagors brought a suit against the purchasers from the mortgagee's descendants and others treating the former as redeeming co-mortgagors for possession of their proportionate share on payment of the proportionate amount of the price stated in the sale deeds. The defendants pleaded that the mortgagors had lost their right to redeem and their title was also extinguished, and that their vendors had become owners of their property.

Held, (1) that the statement of account filed by the mortgagee's pleader in 1849 and the memorandum of appeal signed by the pleader in 1867, would be invalid to save limitation, because under S. 1 (15) of the Limitation Act of 1859, an acknowledgment must be by a mortgagee or some person claiming under him, and as the acknowledgments in this case were by a legal agent, they were invalid, though they would be good under the Act of 1908; in any case, therefore, the suit would have been barred after the beginning of the year 1862; (2) that since the suit was barred at the date when the Limitation Act of 1877 came into force, S. 2 of that Act would apply with the result that the right to sue having been lost could not be revived even though the acknowledgments would have been good under the Act of 1908 which governs the suit. An execution sale was set aside by the original Court on 15—11—1934. The matter was carried in appeal up to the High Court by the auction-purchaser and by others, and the appeals were finally disposed of on 6—10—1937. In 1938, the auction-purchaser applied under O. 21, R. 93 for refund of the poundage and interest on the purchase-money, the actual purchase-money having been recovered by him through the Court earlier.

Held, that the date of the appellate Court's decree and not the date of the original Court's order setting aside the sale should be taken as the starting point of limitation, and the application was therefore not barred.

——Art. 182 (1)—Award—Execution—Limitation—Starting point—Co-operative Societies Rules, R. 22.

Awards under R. 22 of the Co-operative Societies Rules are executable as decrees and this being the case, the provisions of Art. 182 (1) of the Limitation Act are applicable. Under that article the period of limitation is three years from the date of the award. The date of the award does not mean the date written therein but the date on which such award is officially communicated to the person or persons affected thereby. ——Art. 182 (4)—Amendment of time-barred decree—Execution—Limitation.

Art. 182 (4) of the Limitation Act lays down clearly and without reservation that when a decree has been amended the period of limitation is three years from the date of the amendment. It is not stated that the amendment should have been made within three years from the date of the original decree or at a time when the original decree was subsisting. It is not the function of the executing Court to question the correctness or propriety of the amendment of the decree. An appeal against an order dismissing the application of the judgment-debtor to record satisfaction of the decree does not amount to an "appeal" within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act, and would not save limitation for execution of the decree. ——Art. 182 (5)—"Final order"—Order requiring applicant to comply with directions of Court—Application returned for attending to directions of Court—Failure to re-present within reasonable time—Subsequent re presentation after decree had become barred along with fresh application—Limitation, if saved—Revival.

A "final order" within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act means an order putting an end to the application in respect of which it is made and not merely the last order in point of time. An order requiring the applicant to do something in order that the Court may proceed with his application does not even contemplate the end of the petition, and such an order is in no sense a final order. An application returned for complying with certain requirements and not re-presented within a reasonable time, even if none was fixed by the Court, cannot be held to be of any avail, and no question of improper dismissal or illegal dismissal would arise in such a case, such an application cannot be deemed to be pending or revived so as to save limitation under Art. 182 (5). A final decree for sale on a mortgage was passed on 21st October, 1932, and an application for execution was filed in 1933. Notice was ordered and the petition was dismissed for non-payment of batta. On 23rd August, 1934, another petition was filed by the Official Receiver in whom the estate of the decree-holder had vested and it was returned on 13th September, 1934, for complying with certain requirements. After various re-presentations and returns, the petition which was unregistered was again returned on 15th January, 1935, with the endorsement that the directions of the Court had not been attended to, and it was not again re-presented until 18th August, 1937, when it was presented along with a fresh execution petition. It was not, however, accompanied by any application to excuse the delay nor was the Court requested to excuse the delay. The reason for the delay was not stated, and execution of the decree was barred by that time.

Held, that the order of 15th January, 1935, was in no sense a "final order" within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. The suspension of the proceedings till then was due to the act or default of the decree-holder in not re-presenting the petition, and in the circumstances it could not be deemed to be pending or revived, and hence the fresh execution petition filed on 18th August, 1937, was barred by limitation. LIMITATION ACT (1908), Art. 182.

——Art. 182 (5)—Final "order"—Order returning application for transmission of decree to another Court as decree had not been received from transferee Court—If saves limitation.

In 1932 the decree-holder applied to the Court which passed the decree to transmit the decree for execution to Bombay. On 30—8—1932, the Court passed an order directing transmission In February, 1935, another application was made to the Court again praying that the decree should be transferred to Bombay for execution. The order endorsed on that application on 27—2—1935, was: "copy of the decree has not been received from the High Court, Bombay—returned." On 22—3—1935, this application was again presented before the Court, but the Court held that it was barred by limitation.

Held, that the order passed by the Court on 27—2—1935 was a "final order" within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act, as by that order the Court decided that it would have nothing further to do with the application, and the application, filed in 1937, even taken as a fresh application was in time. ——Art. 182 (5)—"Final order"—Order stating that appeal has abated—If final order.

An order stating that an appeal from an order allowing execution of decree has abated comes within Cl. (5) of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act and time runs from the date of such order for the execution of the decree. ——Art. 182 (5)—Final order—Order that Letters Patent appeal has abated.

An order by which the High Court declares a Letters Patent appeal to have abated is a final order within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act. It is in effect an affirmation of the decree of the learned Judge of the High Court and limitation only begins to run against the decree-holder from the date of such order and not from the date of the decree under appeal. ——Art. 182 (5)—"In accordance with law"—Application for larger amount than is due under decree—If saves limitation.

An application by a decree-holder to execute his decree for more than is due to him is not in itself an application not in accordance with law. The appellant obtained a decree for Rs 1,600 ex parte against three defendants on 1st October, 1929. The first defendant applied to have the decree set aside and an order was passed in his favour that it would be set aside if he deposited a sum of Rs. 1,100 and odd. Some of this money was deposited but not all on 27th June, 1930. A revised decree was passed by the Court taking into account the amount paid by the first defendant. The appellant filed a number of execution applications from 1932 to 1936, on the assumption that the liability of the defendants was that recorded in the original ex parte decree. In execution in February, 1937, the first defendant's properties were brought to sale, but an application was filed to set aside the sale by the guardian of the first defendant's children. Pending this, the decree-holder also asked the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the sale fetched an amount larger than was due to him. The sale was set aside. In July, 1937, the appellant applied again for execution, basing his claim on the revised decree of 1930. The plea of limitation was raised.

Held, that the applications of the appellant between 1932 and 1936, must be deemed to have been made in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act, and the application of July, 1937, must therefore be held to be in time. ——Art. 182 (5)—"Proper Court"—Court transmitting decree to another Court for execution—Subsequent application to Court transferring decree—If one made to proper Court.

A Court which transmits its decree for execution to another Court does not thereby divest itself of all its jurisdiction but has jurisdiction to take certain measures in execution. It is therefore a "proper Court" within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act, and an application made to it is a valid application which would save limitation under Art. 182 (5). (Pandrang Row and King, JJ.) KANDASAMI CHETTIAR v. GOKULDAS MADANJI & CO. 54 L.W. 34 = 1941 M.W.N. 627 = A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 731 = (1941) 1 M.L.J. 837.

——Art. 182 (5)—Step-in aid — Application for transfer of decree — Judgment-debtor known to be dead.

An application for transfer of a decree to another Court for execution made at a time when the judgment debtor is known to the decree-holder to be dead, is a valid step-in-aid of execution and would save limitation. (Henderson, J.) RADHABALLAV BASAK v. MAHENDRA KUMAR SEN. 45 C.W.N. 342.

——Art. 182 (5)—Step-in-aid—Application for withdrawal of money awarded upon rateable distribution—Order on—If gives fresh start of limitation.

An application by a decree-holder for withdrawal of the money awarded to him upon rateable distribution is not a step-in-aid of execution, and the order on such an application, being merely a ministerial order, does not furnish a fresh starting point of limitation. ——Art. 182 (5)—Step-in-aid—Application to record part payment or adjustment of decree debt under O. 21, R. 2, C. P. Code—If saves limitation.

An application made to the Court to record a part payment or adjustment of the decretal debt under O. 21, R. 2, C. P. Code, is not a step-in aid of execution which will prevent limitation running under Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. Such an application to record an adjustment under O. 21, R. 2, is a mere certificate and is no application at all under Art. 181 or Art. 182. ——Art. 182 (5)—Step-in-aid—Claim to attached property—Order allowing—Suit by decree-holder—If step-in-aid—Suit finally dismissed—Execution application within three years but beyond three years of prior execution petition—If barred.

An application, to constitute a step-in-aid of execution, has to be filed in the execution proceeding itself, and not in any other suit or proceeding, however, intimately connected the latter might be with the proceedings of the former. Where a claim to attached property is allowed, a suit by the decree holder to set aside the order allowing the claim cannot be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution so as to save limitation for a fresh execution application filed beyond three years of the dismissal of the prior execution petition, though within three years of the final dismissal of his declaratory suit. The wording of O. 21, R. 63 does not alter the nature or character of the claim order or of the suit. The words "subject to the result of such suit" in the rule, come into operation only when the result of the suit is different from the result arrived at by the executing Court. It would be different if the suit of the decree holder succeeds. The finality or conclusiveness of the order allowing the claim in execution is not disturbed by the decision of the Civil Court in the declaratory suit, particularly when the result of the adjudication by both the tribunals is the same. The suit cannot be regarded as a continuation of the execution proceedings. With regard to the assessment and collection of land revenue the (Lower) Burma Land and Revenue Act specifically applies. It is not necessary to make any enquiry to see whether it does so or not. There is no preliminary question of whether arrears exist before the case is taken up by the revenue officer, and accordingly this question is one for him to determine. In view of Ss. 55 and 56, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to decide the question as to arrears of land revenue or default or both and consequently it cannot entertain a suit to set aside a sale by a township officer for arrears of land revenue. S. 128 of the Contract Act lays down only the general principle governing the interpretation of contracts of guarantee and does not purport to govern the relations between parties as a result of subsequent events after the contract has been entered into. While the release of the principal debtor by the act or omission of the creditor has the legal consequence of discharging the surety under S. 134 of the Contract Act, no such result can follow when the principal debtor is discharged by operation of a law or statute subsequently enacted; in such a case the surety cannot claim discharge pro tanto with the principal debtor. Hence a non-agriculturist surety is liable for the full amount of the debt even though the principal debtor who is an agriculturist would be liable only for the amount as scaled down in accordance with Madras Act IV of 1938. ———Scope—If ultra vires—Decree on promissory note passed before Act—Scaling down provisions—Validity of—Government of India Act, S. 100—Construction—Pith and substance theory.

Per Gwyer, C. J. and Varadachariar, J.—It must inevitably happen from time to time that legislation though purporting to deal with a subject in one list, touches also on a subject in another list, and the different provisions of the enactment may be so closely intertwined that blind adherence to a strictly verbal interpretation would result in a large number of statutes being declared invalid because the legislature enacting them may appear to have legislated in a forbidden sphere. Hence the rule has been evolved whereby the impugned statute is examined to ascertain its "pith and substance" or its "true nature and character," for the purpose of determining whether it is legislation with respect to matter in this list or in that This rule of interpretation is equally applicable to the Indian Constitution Act, and may be accepted as a guide for the interpretation of the Government of India Act. It is clear that the pith and substance of the Madras Act IV of 1938, whatever it may be, cannot at any rate be said to be legislation with respect to negotiable instruments or promissory notes; it is immaterial that many or most of the debts with which it deals are in practice evidenced by or based upon such instruments. That is an accidental circumstance which cannot affect the question. The validity or invalidity of the Act cannot vary with money-lenders' practice. The Act cannot therefore be challenged as invading the forbidden field of List I referred to in S. 100 (1) of the Government of India Act, and is therefore intra vires. Further, where the liability on which the Act operates is a liability under a decree of Court passed before the Act in a suit on a promissory note, it ceases to be a debt evidenced by or based on a promissory note, as that is merged in the decree and has become a judgment-debt. The judgment-debt being already in existence when the Act was passed, the Act neither affects nor purports to affect any liability on a promissory note. The provisions of the Act in their application to a decree obtained on the promissory note are within the competence of the Madras Legislature to enact. It cannot be broadly stated that the Act does not really affect the principles embodied in the Negotiable Instruments Act. It is doubtful whether any Provincial Act could, in the form of a Debtors' Relief Act fundamentally affect the principle of negotiability, or the rights of a bona fide transferee for value.

Sulaiman, J.—There can of course be no doubt that the doctrine of pith and substance is of a general application. The substance of the impugned Act is to give relief to agriculturists in respect of interest accruing upon the debts due from them and the scheme of the Act is without doubt to benefit agriculturists as a class and relieve them from the onerous burden of high interest. Taking all the provisions together and considering the Act as a whole, it cannot be doubted that it is with respect to matters in Lists II and III and it is most difficult to place it outside these two Lists. But List I, entry No. 28, specially and expressly assigns cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes and other instruments to the Federal legislature and it is impossible to deny that the Act encroaches upon the field covered by such instruments. A legislation which is with respect to decrees passed on promissory note is necessarily also with respect to promissory notes. The effect of Ss. 8 and 19 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 is to compel Courts to reopen decrees passed on the basis of promissory notes before the Act came into force, and recalculate the amounts due on them disallowing all interest outstanding on 1—10—1937, and even the principal if double the amount has already been paid by way of interest. The Act thus being repugnant to an existing Indian law relating to promissory-notes, which is really a Federal subject, is void to that extent. There is, however, nothing in the Act which really conflicts with any provision of Hindu Law and any repugnancy to the Contract Act is cured by the assent of the Governor-General.

Varadachariar, J.—As there is no provision in the Act dealing in terms with negotiable instruments, any objection based on the wide scope of the Act may be obviated by so interpreting the general terms used in the Act as to limit them to cases with which alone the Legislature was competent to deal. Such a finding cannot be said to be perverse or to involve an irregularity relating to jurisdiction so as to justify interference in revision. Consequently such an advance cannot be scaled down as a debt even where the partners of the firm are shown to be agriculturists within the meaning of Madras Act IV of 1938. In 1936, the sole legatee under a will executed a consolidated promissory note in discharge of earlier promissory notes executed by the testator who died in 1935. In a suit on the note, the legatee who was an agriculturist himself applied for scaling down the debt.

Held, (1) that in order to treat the suit promissory note as a renewal of the earlier promissory notes so as to enable the applicant to take advantage of the Explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938, the debtor had to show that the prior debts were due by an agriculturist and that the maker of the earlier notes (the testator) was an agriculturist on and after 1—10—1937, and the testator having died in 1935, i.e., before the relevant period, could not be treated as an agriculturist on 1—10—1937, and the Court could not go behind the suit promissory note in scaling down; (2) that the debt must consequently be scaled down under S. 9 as a fresh debt of 1936.

Quaere, whether if the testator had lived long enough to make the definition of agriculturist applicable to him, the legatee who was obliged to pay his testator's debts could claim that a fresh document in discharge of the testator's debts was a renewal thereof? The word "decree" in Ss. 7, 8 and 9 refers to decrees passed before the commencement of Madras Act IV of 1938 and not decree passed after the Act. A preliminary decree in a mortgage suit passed after the coming into force of the Act is not liable to be scaled down subsequently. The fact that no final decree has yet been passed in the mortgage suit makes no difference, because it is the preliminary decree which fixes the rights and liabilities of the parties. The final decree does not change the position except that it gives the mortgagee the right to sell the property for the amount declared to be due in the preliminary decree. There was a decree on a promissory note for Rs. 3,000 dated 27-6-1933. On the date of the decree the amount due for principal and interest was Rs. 3,400 with Rs. 337 for costs. On 23-2-1937, the respondent purchased in execution sale the property of the judgment-debtor for Rs. 3,406 for which amount part satisfaction was entired on 17-7-1937. On 30 8 1937, a fresh execution petition was filed for Rs. 662-7-6, as the balance due under the decree. The judgment-debtor claimed relief under Ss. 8, 9 and 19 of the Madras Act IV of 1938.

Held, that the payment of Rs. 3,406, being the sale proceeds of execution could not be regarded as a payment to the debt generally kept in suspense and not appropriated, as it was actually applied in satisfaction of the decree and a pro tanto discharge was given. There was no presumption that it was appropriated first towards principal, and the payment being more than sufficient to cover all the interest on the debt, the judgment debtor could not claim that there was on 1 10-1937 any interest outstanding; he would not therefore be benefited by any re-appropriation from principal to costs under the proviso to S. 19 of the Act. In 1931 R assigned his rights under these two mortgages to the appellent, who in 1935 brought a suit to enforce the mortgages as against the heirs of M, and against the heirs of T on the basis of the covenants of title contained in the deeds of assignment. The Court found that M had no title to the lands mortgaged and dismissed the suit as against his heirs, but passed a decree for Rs. 5,290 against the heir of T on the ground of breach of covenants of title contained in the assignment deeds by T. After the coming into force of Madras Act IV of 1938, one of the heirs of T applied under S. 19 of the Act to scale down the decree debt.

Held, that the liability of the heirs of T could not be traced to the original mortgages by M, but only to the assignment by T, and the basis for scaling down the decree debt was not the original principal of the two mortgage deeds by M but Rs 5,290, the amount for which the assignments by T were made to R. MADRAS AGRIC. RELIEF ACT (1938), S. 8.

The respondents who had executed a mortgage to the petitioner in 1914 sued for redemption of the mortgage joining as co-plaintiffs the purchasers of portions of the hypotheca, and obtained a preliminary decree. The petitioners were agriculturists, but the other decree-holders (purchasers) were not agriculturists. The respondents applied for scaling down the decree under Ss. 8 and 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938. It was found that the amount already paid to the decree-holder was more than twice the principal sum payable by the respondents under the mortgage and the Court therefore ordered under S. 19 read with S. 8 of the Act full satisfaction of the decree as a whole to be entered. The petitioner decree-holder contended, in revision, that since some of the other judgment-debtors who were purchasers of portions of the hypotheca were not agriculturists, the Court below should not have entered full satisfaction of the decree even as against them as they were not entitled to the benefits of the Act.

Held, that the order entering full satisfaction was correct, by entering satisfaction of the decree as a whole the Court was only allowing to the agriculturist mortgagors the full benefits of the Act and not necessarily benefiting the non agriculturist purchasers of portions of the hypotheca. A mortgagee who sues to enforce his mortgage is not entitled to a decree for the whole amount due under the mortgage against a non agriculturist Court auction purchaser of the mortgaged property, when the agriculturist mortgagor claims to have the debt scaled down under Madras Act IV of 1938. It is true that agriculturist debtors alone are entitled to the relief provided in the Act which does not contemplate any scaling down of debts due by others but it does not follow that a non-agriculturist debtor can in no circumstances be benefited by the scaling down of a debt under the Act. The properties in the hands of the purchaser are liable only as security for the debt due to the mortgagor, and if, as a result of the Act, there is a statutory discharge or reduction of the debt, the properties cannot be proceeded against for anything more than the scaled down amount of the debt. If the burden on the property purchased by the purchaser is reduced without payment by reason of the provisions of S. 8 of the Act, the purchase proves to that extent an advantageous one, and there is nothing in the Act to deprive him of the fruits of his lucky purchase, even though he is not an agriculturist. He gets the benefit of the scaling down not because the Act applies to him, but because such benefit is a necessary incident of his purchase under the general law and the Act does not deprive him of it. The mortgagee's relinquishment of his right to a personal decree against the mortgagor after the coming into force of the Act and the mortgagor's application for relief under the Act cannot affect the position arising under the Act with reference to a date long prior to such relinquishment. In respect of a promissory note executed by defendants 1 and 2 on 4-1-1931, the 3rd, 4th and 5th defendants gave a letter of guarantee on 7-8-1933. In a suit on the promissory note, a compromise decree was passed for about Rs. 5,000 for principal, interest and costs. The 1st and the 5th defendants applied for relief under Madras Act IV of 1938. The other defendants were not made parties to these applications.

Held, (1) that as the 5th defendant became liable under the letter of guarantee only on 7-8-1933, he was entitled to have his liability scaled down with reference to S. 9 of Madras Act IV of 1938, and not under S. 8, although under the general law he may have a right to resist execution on the ground that the full amount due from the principal debtors have been paid; (2) that a decree on a compromise was substantially the same as a decree on any other contract and to the extent to which the compromise was a renewal of a pre-existing debt the decree had to be scaled down on the basis of the original principal; (3) that since the compromise did not separately allocate any portion of the amount towards the costs in the suit, it was not proper for the Court to reopen the compromise, tax the costs and treat the payment of the sum so taxed as the amount first to be provided for under the proviso to S. 19 of the Act, which related only to costs as originally decreed to the creditor; (4) that the proviso to S. 19 applied only to costs as decreed and to costs in execution, and the Court should not therefore direct payment to be made towards execution costs before the scaling down process was to start. The respondent on 26—6—1932, executed a promissory note for Rs. 463 in renewal of two earlier notes, the principal of which totalled Rs. 350. On 26—6—1934, Rs. 111-8-0 was paid for interest and Rs. 323 was paid for principal leaving a balance of Rs. 140 due. On 15—12—1934, Rs. 8 was paid for inerest and Rs. 40 for balance, leaving a balance of Rs. 100. The suit was filed in December, 1937, for Rs. 100 and subsequent interest and ended in a decree on 4—3—1938.

Held, that in scaling down the decree under S. 19 of of Madras Act IV of 1938, the debtor could not prove that there was an appropriation to the principal only of the earlier notes or that any interest was left outstanding on those notes so as to be cancelled on 1—10—1937, under S. 8. The parties actually intended to appropriate the payments towards the real principal of the suit note which comprised both principal and interest of the earlier notes. The plaintiff sued on a note executed by the second defendant in favour of the plaintiff's brother the first defendant on 14th April, 1933, which was assigned to the plaintiff on 2nd August, 1937. It was found that the second defendant was an agriculturist. It was in evidence that the suit note of 1933 actually discharged an earlier note of about the year 1931, executed in favour of the plaintiff himself at a time when the family of the plaintiff and first defendant was undivided, the partition being in 1932. The lower appellate Court found that the creditor had not fulfilled his duty of putting before the Court the materials necessary for scaling down the debt because of the non-production of the prior document of 1931 and that in the absence of proof of the documents necessary in order to ascertain the original principal no decree could be given against the second defendant. On revision,

Held, that no doubt, in a case in which it can be shown that the creditor has wilfully failed to produce earlier documents which ought to be looked into for the purpose of scaling down the debt the Court would be entitled to draw an inference adverse to the creditor from the non production of those documents [Error in report of C. R. P. No. 331 of 1939 in Suryanarayana v. Viswanadham, (1940) 2 M.L.J. (N.R.C.) 27, pointed out]. But as the suit note itself was executed in favour of the first defendant in discharge of an earlier note executed in favour of the plaintiff, the fact that the suit note was subsequently assigned to the plaintiff would not make the note a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor. As the first note was executed in favour of the plaintiff as representing the joint family and the second one was executed in favour of the first defendant as a member of that family to whom the debt had been assigned on partition it could not be said that the creditors were the same in the two transactions. If the note of 1931 had been assigned to plaintiff before it was discharged by the note of 1933 there would be a renewal in favour of the same creditor but no such case was pleaded. Accordingly the suit ought not to be dismissed solely for the reason that plaintiff had not produced the materials necessary to scale down the debt but must be decreed as scaled down under S. 9 of the Act. ——S. 8, Expl—Applicability—Debt due by Hindu joint family under promissory note by two members—Partition—Debt allotted to another member—Fresh promissory note by that member—If renewal.

Where there is a debt due by a Hindu joint family, which is a "person" under S. 3 (1) of the Madras Act IV of 1938, for which is substituted another debt due by an individual who formerly constituted part of that statutory person, there is a different debtor, and it would be carrying the theory of property liability too far to treat this different debtor as merely renewing his own liability which had resulted from an interest in the joint family property. Where on a partition in the defendant's family, a debt under a promissory note dated 2—3—1925 executed by the defendant's father and brother was allotted to the defendant who thereafter executed a promissory note on 12—7—1932, in discharge of the prior note.

Held, that the defendant's debt was not due from the same debtor as the original debt and could not therefore be regarded as a renewal or inclusion in a fresh document of that debt within the meaning of the Explanation to S 8 of the Madras Act IV of 1938. ——S 8, Explanation—Applicability—Debt due to father—Allotment in unequal portions to sons at partition after death of father—Debtor executing fresh documents to sons separately for portions of debt allotted to them—If renewal or inclusion.

The Explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938 requires that the debt must continue in substance to be the same though the amount and the parties under the various documents given as vouchers for it need not strictly be identical. This requirement cannot be satisfied when the debt is divided among the heirs of the creditor and the debtor executes a fresh document for a part of the debt in favour of each of such heirs. Where at a partition between the sons of the creditor after the latter's death, the debt is split up into unequal parts and the sons of the deceased creditor get the debtor to execute separate vouchers for the portions of the debt allotted to each of them, it cannot be said that the documents executed by the debtor separately in favour of the sons of the original creditor for the portions of the original debt allotted to them at the partition represent a renewal of the original debt or its inclusion in fresh documents within the meaning of the Explanation to S. 8, although the sums for which the documents are given are equal in the aggregate to the amount of the original debt. The 1st defendant and another were indebted under contract which was anterior to 1932 and which ripened into a decree in 1933. To discharge this decree a fresh promissory note was executed by the 1st defendant, and the second defendant who was not concerned in the earlier debt. Both the defendants were agriculturists and applied for scaling down the debt.

Held, that so far as the 1st defendant was concerned the debt was to be scaled down under S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938, on the basis of its being a renewal of the original liability under the Explanation to S. 8, but that as regards the second defendant, the Explanation to S. 8 did not apply and that he could claim relief only under S. 9 in the matter of interest under the promissory note of 1933. A promissory note of 1929 executed by R, S and T was discharged by another promissory note of 1932 executed by them. In discharge of this note of 1932, R and S alone executed the suit promissory note on 29—7—1935. It was not a case of a joint family debt; it was proved that in May, 1937, R purchased lands and would hence be an agriculturist as defined by Madras Act IV of 1938. S was throughout an agriculturist. It was not known whether T was or was not an agriculturist. In an application by R and S for scaling down the debt, Held, (1) that the debt of 1932 was apparently due jointly and severally from R, S and T, and it was discharged by another debt due from R and S, which was sufficient to make the latter debt an inclusion in a fresh document of the former debt; (2) that the subsequent note by R and S was a renewal of the entire debt binding R and S by reason of the earlier note; (3) that the purchase by R of lands in May, 1937, was sufficient to qualify him to claim the benefit of the Act as an agriculturist.

Held, further, that the relevant period apart from the date of the suit, when a debtor has to be an agriculturist in order to claim the benefit of the Explanation to S. 8 of the Act, would be the period from and after the 1st October, 1937, having regard to the proviso to S. 3 (ii) of the Act. The definition of "creditor", in S. 3 (v) of Madras Act IV of 1938, though it expressly includes his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, does not include the person beneficially entitled to the amount lent. Hence where there is a debt in favour of A discharged by a mortgage debt in favour of B, it will not be open to the debtor to adduce evidence to show that the money which he owes to B is really the money of A so as to bring into force Explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. On 1-7 1933, the petitioner executed a promissory note for Rs. 391-15-1 in renewal of an earlier note for Rs 255-15-0. On 4-9 1934, the petitioner made a payment of Rs. 26-5-2 towards interest and Rs. 110-2-10 towards the principal of the promissory note of 1-7-1933. A suit was filed on this note on 4 9 1937.

Held, that the appropriations made on 4-9-1937 could not be undone, and on that date the principal of the note was reduced to Rs. 281-12-3, being made up of Rs. 255 15-0, the principal originally advanced and Rs. 25 13-3, interest. Under the Explanation to S. 8 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 the principal of the renewed note would be Rs. 255-15 0, and the interest outstanding on 1-10-1937 would be cancelled. Although it had been held that a son was estopped from disputing the liability of his property under a mortgage by his father after partition by reason of his attestation of the mortgage, it cannot be said that a fresh mortgage executed by the son alone binding only his own property and discharging his father's mortgage is merely a renewal of the son's own liability. S. 20 of Act IV of 1938 does not contemplate any final decision on the question of the right of the applicant to apply under S. 19. Moreover, when the applicant allows his application under S. 20 to be dismissed for default he is clearly abandoning only his right to a stay. That abandonment may be due to many causes. For instance, the execution may have stopped for some reasons quite apart from the proceedings under the Act. In such a case there is no point in the applicant going on with his proceedings under S. 20 if time is available to him without such proceedings for preferring his application to the Court which passed the decree under S. 19. Accordingly when an agriculturist allows his application under S. 20 to be dismissed because it is not necessary, such a dismissal would not bar the substantive application under S. 19. The period of limitation prescribed under S. 20 begins to run with the grant of a stay and not when there was no grant of stay. (1939) 2 M.L.J. 308 = I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 886, Ref. to and Expl.

Held also, that an amount realised in execution of a decree after 1st October, 1937, could not be appropriated by the decree-holder to interest accruing due before 1st October, 1937, so as to nullify the effect of S. 8 (1) of the Act. When on open payments made in 1932, counter-interest was awarded and a fresh promissory note was executed in 1934, after deducting the payment with counter-interest.

Held, (1) that the mere fact that counter-interest was awarded on open payments does not indicate that the payment should be treated as payments towards principal; (2) that when a fresh promissory note was executed after deducting the payments with counter-interest, it must be deemed that the appropriation was made at the time of the fresh promissory note; (3) that the interest outstanding at the time of the fresh promissory note must be deemed to have been satisfied by the payment, the balance if any appropriated towards principal; and (4) that the onus lies heavily on the debtor to prove that the interest was outstanding on 1st October, 1937, to get the benefit of S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. ——S. 9 (1), proviso—Construction—Promissory note in 1937 for balance due on mortgage executed after 1-10-1932—Scaling down—Basis of—Original mortgage advance—If can be adopted.

There is nothing in S. 9 of Madras Act IV of 1938, which justifies the treatment of the principal of a debt as anything different from the principal of the contract actually sued on or as warranting a procedure analogous to that of S. 8 of the Act, which S. 9 does not seem to contemplate except for the specific purposes of reducing debts which originated before 1st October, 1932. In a suit on a promissory note dated 22 9 1937, executed for the balance due under a prior mortgage in favour of the same creditor executed on 19 12 1932, the defendant cannot claim to have the debt scaled down on the basis of the original mortgage advance; the Court cannot import into the first part of the proviso to S. 9 (1) the explanation to S. 8 which treats the original principal as the principal for the purposes of S 8. Where the prior debt was not contracted before 1-10-1932, the last part of the proviso has no application. There can, under ——S. 10 (2)—Applicability—Usufructuary mortgage in renewal of prior simple mortgage—Clause providing for keeping alive prior mortgage—Mortgagee to be in possession under mortgage in lieu of interest—No rate of interest stipulated—Liability to scaling down.

A usufructuary mortgage deed in and by which the property is mortgaged under a stipulation that the mortgagee should be in possession of the property in lieu of interest, no rate of interest being stipulated as being payable to the mortgagee, directly comes within S. 10 (2) of the Madras Act IV of 1938, and the debt under such a mortgage cannot be scaled down. The fact that the mortgage was executed in renewal of an earlier simple mortgage deed and that there is a clause in it providing for the keeping alive of the prior mortgage would not entitle the mortgagor in a suit on the usufructuary mortgage to claim the benefit of the Act on the ground that the suit must be deemed to have been laid on the original mortgage as well, when the suit is laid only on the usufructuary mortgage. The clause for the keeping alive of the prior mortgage is intended for the benefit of the mortgagee so that he can use it as a shield against any mortgage which might intervene. S. 10(2)(1) of Madras Act IV of 1938 is not confined to mortgages which are usufructuary mortgages within the terms of S. 58 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act. The clause provides a special exemption for any mortgage under which the mortgagee has possession and no rate of interest is specified. It does not apply to a mortgage in which, although the mortgagee is in possession a rate of interest is stipulated, and it makes no difference whether the rate of interest stipulated in the mortgage is one which might be regarded as penal. A mortgage stipulated that the mortgaged properties shall be enjoyed by the mortgagee for two years in lieu of interest, that on the expiry of two years the mortgagor shall pay the amount due, and if he failed to do so the mortgagee shall retain the right to enjoy the usufruct of the properties and shall also be entitled to three per cent. per annum in addition to the usufruct.

Held, (1) that the mortgage was one under which a rate of interest was stipulated and was therefore not saved by S. 10 (2) (1) of Madras Act IV of 1938 and was liable to be scaled down; (2) that the enjoyment of the produce by the mortgagee could not be deemed to be a payment to the creditor by the debtor falling under S. 8 (2) of the Act. Interest "payable in respect of the liability" in S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Act refers to the interest on the basic debt and not the subsequent interest on the decree amount. Where a debt due to a public company carries interest at not more than 9 per cent. it is clearly excluded from the operation of Ss. 8 and 9 of Madras Act IV of 1938, and therefore Ss. 8 and 9 cannot be called in aid to substitute for that liability an earlier liability which it renewed and which bore a higher rate of interest, and thereby to exclude it from the operation of S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Act. The liability excluded from the purview of operation under Ss. 8 and 9 by S. 10 (2) (iii) s the present liability under which the debtor is, at the time of his application, indebted. Where a debt is the subject-matter of an appeal, if an application for scaling it down under Madras Act IV of 1938, is not made in the appellate Court before the judgment is pronounced, the decree must be drawn up in accordance with the terms of the judgment, and no subordinate Court has power to pass an order which will affect the decree. Where, however, an application for scaling down is made before judgment is delivered, the proper course will be to reserve the final order until the application for scaling down is decided. In a case where at the commencement of the Act there was no rent payable by an agriculturist in respect of a land, the tenant being a non-agriculturist, the mere fact that the land has been assigned, after the Act came into force, to an agriculturist cannot give the latter the benefit of S. 15 of the Act. MADRAS AGRIC. RELIEF ACT (1938), S. 15.

The operation of S. 15 of Madras Act IV of 1938 is not confined to cases arising between landlord and tenant under the Madras Estates Land Act. Where an agraharam within a zemindari was not excluded from the zamindari by the permanent settlement but continued as before the settlement to be held on an under-tenure under the zamindar, the jodi payable by the proprietor of the agraharam to the zamindar is "rent" as defined by Madras Act IV of 1938, and comes within the purview of S. 15 of the Act. The proprietor of the agraharam is a tenant, as he is a person liable to pay the rent (the jodi), and the property in respect of which such rent has accrued is his holding. ——S. 15—Applicability—Mortgage with possession by jenmi—Lease back by mortgagee to jenmi—Right of jenmi lessee to apply for wiping-off of arrears of rent—Rent under lease—If "interest".

Where a jenmi mortgages his land with possession and takes the property back at the same time from the mortgagee under a lease undertaking to pay rent to the lessor-mortgagee, the rent payable is not interest so far as Madras Act IV of 1938 is concerned. The lease though contemporaneous with and closely related to the mortgage, must be regarded as a lease and the payment thereunder must be regarded as rent. The mortgagee from the jenmi has, by reason of the mortgage, an interest entitling him to possession of the land and is thus an "intermediary" under the Malabar Tenancy Act, though he transfers that possession to the jenmi himself. The rent payable by the jenmi to the mortgagee-lessor (intermediary) therefore falls within S. 15 of Madras Act IV of 1938, and the lessee-jenmi is therefore entitled to relief under S 15, if he makes the required deposit within the time laid down by the section. An assignee of a part of property demised on kanom is liable by privity of estate to pay a proportionate part of the rent or michawaram reserved under the demise, so long as he remains assignee; and by virtue of S 41 of the Malabar Tenancy Act, the jenmi is entitled to recover the entire rent reserved under the demise from such assignee. The assignee is therefore entitled to claim the benefit of S. 15 of Madras Act IV of 1938 in respect of arrears of michawaram due to the jenmi. The fact that a part of the consideration for the assignment was expressly reserved with the assignee for payment to the jenmi towards the arrears is no bar to his claiming the statutory right to have the arrears wiped out under S. 15. ——S. 15 (4)—Applicability—Decree for rent by Civil Court—Application under S. 15 (4) to Revenue Court—Competency—Procedure.

S. 19 only provides for the scaling down a decree for the repayment of a debt which term does not, strictly speaking, include a liability for rent. But a procedure analogous to that laid down in S. 19 should be followed in the case of decrees for rent. It is therefore apparent that when there is a decre of a Civil Court determining the amount of rent payable for the relevant period there is no room for any application to the Revenue Court under S. 15 (4) of the Act. The object of S. 15 (4) is clearly to enable a tenant whose liability for rent has not yet come into Court to ascertain what is the extent of that liability as scaled down and pay it into the Revenue Court in order to prevent an unnecessary suit. Where, however, a decree has been passed by a Civil Court for rent, the proper course for the judgment-debtor is to apply for relief under S. 19 of the Act to the Court which passed the decree. gage debts without impleading Official Receiver—Competency.

S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act has no application to sales by Official Receivers and cannot be invoked in favour of a person who is not a judgment-debtor seeking to stay the execution of a decree. It is also clear that though S. 21 of the Act does not lay down any procedure for scaling down debts due by an insolvent, the procedure should, as far as may be, be analogous to that prescribed for the reduction of other debts. The Court which passed the decree would have to be moved under S. 19 to reduce the decree and the Court which executes the decree must be moved under S. 20 to stay execution of the decree in so far as the debts of the insolvent are covered by decrees of Courts. It would be within the power of the Insolvency Court to entertain an application under S. 21. for scaling down of those debts of the insolvent which are not covered by decrees or suits in other Courts. But any proceedings under S. 21 should not be taken behind the back of the Official Receiver by the insolvent himself. If the Official Receiver is about to sell properties subject to mortgages which are liable to be scaled down, an application may be made to the Insolvency Court to give directions to the Official Receiver to suspend the sale until the scaling down process is completed. It is not open to the insolvent to apply to the Official Receiver to stay the sale, or to apply to the Insolvency Court to have it declared that he is an agriculturist and that his debts should be scaled down without making the Official Receiver a party to the application. S. 19 applies to the decree made by the Privy Council in appeal from decisions of Courts in Madras. The Privy Council is not a foreign Court or tribunal so as to make the section inapplicable to a decree passed on an appeal to the Privy Council taken from the province of Madras. ——S. 19—Applicability—Decree in suit by trial Court before Act came into force—Appeal—Appellate decree after Act confirming decree of trial Court—Subsequent application to trial Court for scaling down—Competency.

S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act would not apply to a decree passed after the commencement of the Act, whether it be a decree passed by the trial Court in a suit or by an appellate Court in proceedings in appeal of which the affected party has had notice. Whether the decree of the appellate Court is passed in the first instance or in modification or reversal or confirmation of the decree of the original Court, nevertheless it would be a decree passed after the commencement of the Act, and cannot be amended under S. 19 of the Act, although the decree in the suit was passed by the trial Court before the Act came into force. The pendency of an appeal suspends the finality of the decree of the original Court, and before a final decree is passed on appeal, all the relief which a party is entitled to and which would have been given by the original Court had Act IV of 1938 been in existence on the date on which it passed the decree should be urged before the appellate Court is passed. An application under S. 19 of the Act to the original Court is incompetent when the decree of such Court has been confirmed on appeal after the coming into force of the Act. S. 19 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 has no application to decrees passed after the Act came into force, one reason being that any person who has a contention to urge which will affect such a decree must urge it in the pending proceedings, and if he does not so urge he must be taken to have waived it. There is no reason to apply a different principle to proceedings in appeal of which the affected party has notice. Accordingly where an application to scale down a decree (against which an appeal is pending) is dismissed, and an appeal against such orders of dismissal is not clubbed with the main appeal which is allowed by the debtor to proceed ex parte, then after the disposal of the main appeal substituting the appellate decree for the decree sought to be scaled down, the original decree cannot be scaled down and the appeal against the dismissal of the application for scaling down under S. 19 becomes infructuous and must be dismissed. ——S. 19 — Applicability — "Judgment-debtor" — Surety for defendant in application to set aside ex parte decree—Liability of—Application to scale down decree—Competency—Extent of right available to surety.

A person executing a surety bond undertaking to satisfy any decree which might be passed against a defendant can be deemed to be a judgment-debtor entitled to scale down the decree which might ultimately be passed, by the procedure laid down in S. 19 of the Madras Act IV of 1938. In an application by the respondents 2 and 3 to set aside an ex parte decree passed against them in a suit by the 1st respondent on two promissory notes of 1929 and 1931, the petitioner stood surety and gave a bond on 4—7—1934, by which he undertook to satisfy any decree that might be passed against the 2nd and 3rd respondents. The ex parte decree was set aside, and the suit reopened and on 10—9—1934, a compromise decree was passed in favour of the 1st respondent against the respondents 2 and 3, for principal and interest at 12 per cent. and costs. The 1st respondent sought execution against the surety. The surety applied for scaling down the decree under S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938.

Held, that the petitioner (surety) was, for the purposes of execution, in the position of a judgment-debtor, he should be given the benefit of the procedure laid down in S. 19 to the limited extent of the reduction or scaling down of interest under the decree with reference to the appropriate section of the Act, having regard to the date on which the liability of the surety himself was incurred. The bond and the decree in the case having come into being in 1934, the surety was entitled to the benefit of the 1st part of S. 9 of the Act, as his liability fell under that section. He was not entitled to go behind the decree and have his liability reduced with reference to the original promissory notes by the judgment-debtors. After a final decree in a suit on a mortgage some of the mortgaged items of property were sold privately on 9-10-1937 and the vendee was directed to pay the amount to the mortgagee He paid a portion, retaining the balance for future payment. The debtor applied for entering up satisfaction on the ground that more than twice the amount of the principal and the costs had been paid. The creditor applied to have the purchaser impleaded as a party to the final decree and opposed the debtor's application on the ground that it should not enure to the benefit of the purchaser who was not an agriculturist.

Held, (1) that the purchaser could not be impleaded as he had no separate rights to agitate in the execution of the decree; (2) that he was not a party to the decree and the scaling down could not be restricted to the judgment-debtor agriculturist's interest in the property in his possession inasmuch as that would result in the splitting up of the decree against the only party to the decree; (3) that there was no decree against two persons, one an agriculturist and the other a non-agriculturist, but the decree was only against one person, the mortgagor. On the basis of a mortgage executed in August 1925, for Rs. 7,500, a decree was passed for the principal amount and Rs. 3,311-14-0 interest, Rs. 336-8-4 subsequent interest, and Rs. 1,515-8-0 as taxed costs. In 1935, the judgment-debtor mortgaged one of the items of the mortgaged properties with the leave of the Court and deposited a sum of Rs. 8,500, which he raised by mortgage, in Court towards the decree. In 1936, a further sum of Rs. 500 was paid towards the decree and part satisfaction was entered to the extent of Rs. 9,000. From the order of assessment to income-tax made on the decree holder in 1936, it was found that the decree-holder had appropriated in his books Rs. 5,000 out of Rs. 8,500 towards the principal and Rs. 3,500 towards interest. The sum of Rs. 500 was not definitely appropriated either to the principal or to the interest, but it was definitely appropriated to the decree.

Held, (1) that the sum of Rs. 500 could not be treated as unappropriated; (2) that in the absence of evidence of the judgment-debtor to the contrary, the sum of Rs. 8,500 could not be treated as not definitely appropriated by the act of the creditor, and the creditor's appropriation must therefore stand except for purposes of re-appropriation under the proviso to S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938; (3) that it was equitable that the amount appropriated towards the principal and the amount appropriated towards interest should contribute rateably in making up the amount required for re appropriation towards costs. ——S 23—Application—Sale in execution of decree for rent under Madras Estates Land Act—If can be set aside

S. 23 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 is not inapplicable to sales in execution of decrees for rent under the Madras Estates Land Act. In terms the section applies to sales in execution of any decree whereby immovable property in which an agriculturist has an interest has been sold on or after 1st October, 1937, and if the application is made within 90 days of the commencement of the Act, the Court is obliged, if satisfied that the applicant is an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act, to set aside the sale after giving notice to the persons interested and hearing them. The absence in S. 23 of a non-obstante provision regarding what is contained in the Estates Land Act, the absence of any necessity for confirmation of a sale under the Estates Land Act, the absence of provisions in S. 23 of the Madras Act IV of 1938 regarding the setting aside of sales under the summary provisions contained in Ss. 112 to 118 of the Estates Land Act, and the non-mention of Estates Land Act in S. 23 are not an indication that S. 23 would have no application to sales for arrears of rent in the ordinary Civil Courts under the procedure laid down by the C. P. Code. The words "any decree" in S 23 are very wide and would include a decree for rents under the Estates Land Act. (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) VENKATARATNAM v. SURYA RAO.

It does not appear to have been the intention of the Legislature to deprive the purchaser of the profits which his purchase has earned in the interval between the original execution of the decree and the cancellation of the sale on an application under S. 23 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. S. 24 is altogether silent on the subject of interest and on the subject of profits. The Act is an expropriatory measure, and the process of expropriation should not proceed beyond that which is laid down either by the express language of the Act, or by necessary implication therefrom. There is no express provision that the judgment-debtor should be entitled to the profits on the land the sale of which is set aside, and no such provision can be read into the Act by necessary implication from its terms. R. 7 of the rules enacted by the Provincial Government under Madras Act IV of 1938, which makes it clear that the term "assessed to property tax" in Proviso C to S. 3 (ii) of the Act would not cover the case of a person in whose name an assessment has been made when he was not in fact the owner of the property during the relevant period is not ultra vires. There is nothing repugnant to the apparent intention of Proviso C in this rule, nor can it be said that the rule gives to the proviso a meaning which is not its probable meaning. The use of the word "owner" in the last sentence of the Proviso C, gives considerable support to the view that the Legislature intended to disqualify from a claim to be an agriculturist only a person from whom tax had been demanded by virtue of ownership. It is within the powers of the Provincial Government to make a rule, such as R. 7, which merely removes an ambiguity in a clause of the statute, and is not beyond the powers of the Government under S. 28 (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) ISWARIAH v. KANAPPA CHETTY.

Where persons have been found guilty of running a common gaming house and of gaming within the house, the general principle to be adopted by the Magistrate in dealing with the money found on the persons concerned under S. 47 of the City Police Act is to consider whether the money is likely to have been used in connection with the gaming. If he finds in the affirmative, he should order its forfeiture; if not he should refrain from doing so. It is a question of fact in each case whether money found on the person of the accused convicted under the Act was used for gaming. In an average case when there is no evidence one way or the other, the rule may be adopted of forfeiting such money as may be found on the floor and no more. But where there is evidence pointing one way or the other, the Magistrate is bound to take that evidence into consideration and not

On 5—1—1916, a lessee, K, went into possession of certain properties under a registered lease deed which gave him a lease of the premises for five years. This was renewed for a period of three years on 5—1—1921 on the same terms. In a partition suit in 1924, receivers were appointed in respect of the properties, and they ejected K and leased the properties to another. On 27—8—1929, the properties were leased to another and on 1—11—1931, they were again leased to another. In 1917, K, the then lessee, sublet a portion of the properties to the respondents who erected a shed on the property for storing firewood. On each occasion when a fresh lease was granted, the respondents accepted the then lessee as their landlord and paid him rent. In a suit for ejectment in 1934, the respondents claimed the benefit of S. 12 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act.

Held, that the respondents could not be said to be holding under a tenancy created before 1922 when the Act came into force, but were in possession only under a tenancy created after the Act came into force. A sub-lessee could have no greater rights than his landlord and when his landlord's lease terminated, any sub-lease created by him ceased to exist. K's lease having terminated in 1925, and there having been a new sub lease under each of the subsequent leases, the respondents must be deemed to be in possession under a sub tenancy which commenced on 1—11—1931. S. 48 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act only contemplates cases where proceedings have to be initiated against a society and not to cases where a society was itself a party to an order in proceedings instituted by virtue of the Co operative Societies Act. Where in execution of a decree a Co-operative Society brings certain properties to sale, and a claim to the properties preferred under R. 22 (17) (a) of Rules under the Act is dismissed by the sale officer, the claimant is entitled to file a suit to set aside the order rejecting his claim petition, without the leave of the Registrar of Co operative Societies. Cases which are expressly provided in the Act are specifically saved by S. 48 from the condition as to leave. Sub-Rr (a) to (c) of R. 22 (17) take effect as if enacted in the Act by virtue of S. 65 (4), and as the rule specifically provides for a suit to set aside the claim order within 6 months, the prohibition under S. 48 cannot apply to such a suit. S. 17 of the Debt Conciliation Act leaves no option to the Board. If before the expiration of the twelve months no settlement has been arrived at, the debtor's petition must be dismissed. There is no power in the Board to extend the proceedings beyond twelve months. The Board cannot evade its statutory duty under S. 17 by rejecting the application under S. 7 of the Act. Once the Board takes an application on file and finds no formal defects which would enable it to dismiss the application under S. 7, it must proceed under S. 8, and thereafter it has no jurisdiction to go back and dismiss the petition under S. 7, so as to enable the debtor to file another petition. The Board's duty is to dismiss the petition under S. 17 on the expiry of the twelve months, though that would preclude a fresh application. The Board has no power to extend the period by having recourse to S. 7 when it has to proceed under S. 17. The omission to give the Board power to extend its proceedings beyond 12 months is a defect which cannot be remedied by the Courts, but which could be remedied only by the Legislature. After a statement of claim has been filed by a creditor before the Board under S. 10 (1) of the Debt Conciliation Act, the Board has no longer jurisdiction to declare the debt as discharged under S. 10 (2). Where, after filing such a statement the Board declares the debt discharged on the ground of the creditor's absence at the adjourned hearing and failure to produce account books, the order is unlawful and liable to be quashed by a writ of certiorari. It is only when there is another suitable remedy open to the aggrieved party that the Court will not issue a writ of certiorari. The provision for review under S. 23 of the Debt Conciliation Act cannot be regarded as a suitable or other remedy so as to disentitle the aggrieved creditor to the issue of a writ. A creditor, when filing his statement of debt giving particulars under S. 10 (1) of the Debt Conciliation Act, stated that his account books were filed, in Court in a partition suit in which he was a defendant and took time for production of the account books. On the adjourned date, he was still unable to produce the account books and he did not appear. The Conciliation Board thereupon passed an order discharging the debt under S. 10 (2) of the Act. There was no dispute between the creditor and the debtor as regards the amount due.

Held, that the creditor having substantially complied with the provisions of S. 10 (1) of the Act, the order under S. 10 (2) was illegal and without jurisdiction the failure of the creditor to produce his account books or to appear before the Board on the adjourned date gave no warrant to the Board to pass this order of cancellation. In a case where the jurisdiction of the Debt Conciliation Board to entertain a debtor's petition is challenged on the ground that the petitioner was not a "debtor" under the Debt Conciliation Act, and objections are raised stating that the debtor has fraudulently and collusively included false and bogus debts, it is the obvious duty of the Board to inquire into these objections and give its finding. Without a finding on these questions the Board would have no jurisdiction to proceed further. Where the Board does not decide these questions, or enquire into the genuineness of the debts challenged as false debts and does not prepare a schedule of assets and liabilities which it is its duty to do under the Act, the orders of the Board discharging certain debts for failure of the creditors to file statements, and allowing settlement of certain debts, and granting certificate under S. 18 of the Act are all without jurisdiction and must be quashed, as they cannot be sustained.

Per Chief Justice—It is difficult to see why a Debt Conciliation Board should be given the power to cancel a debt which the debtor himself admits to be due simply because the creditor has not filed a statement confirming the particulars set out in the debtor's application; though he may be precluded from disputing the debtor's figures, there can be no justification at all for depriving him of what the debtor has acknowledged to be due to him. Abuse of the powers under S. 10 (2) and arbitrary nature of the orders pointed out. (Leach, C.J. and Somayya, J.) VEERARAGHAVA RAO v. DEBT CONCILIATION BOARD, BEZWADA.

In a petition by a debtor for conciliation of his debts, the creditor who was the only creditor requested the Debt Conciliation Board to summon a mortgage deed in the possession of his brother, who had filed a partition suit against him, as evidence of his debt. The Board did not comply with this request and declared the debt to be discharged, Held, that it was the duty of the Board to summon the document and the Board was wrong in declaring the debt, admitted by the debtor himself to be due, discharged on the ground that the creditor did not furnish a proper statement under S. 10 (2) of the Debt Conciliation Act. The order was of a most arbitrary character and unjust and must therefore be quashed. (Leach, C.J.

The applicant filed a fresh application and applied also for stay of execution, but the Court refused to grant stay. More than twelve months had elapsed from the date when the first application was made.

Held, (1) that the dismissal was under S. 9 of the Debt Conciliation Act and not under S. 7, and hence the permission granted by the Board in dismissing the application was one which it had no jurisdiction to grant; (2) the second application could not therefore be regarded as a restoration or a continuation of the first but was a new application; (3) that even if the two

The appellant, a railway company, owned vacant sites within the Municipality, and these lands were sought to be assessed to general property tax on the strength of a Government notification which declared the company liable to tax. Under the instructions of the Local Government and at the instance of the appellant company, a committee was convened and the committee fixed the capital value and the annual value of the lands. The municipal chairman who was the executive authority empowered to levy the tax adopted the value fixed by the committee and levied the tax on the annual value so arrived at. The company having paid the tax filed a suit for a refund on the ground that the tax had been illegally levied.

Held, (1) that the committee were satisfied that resort to the capital value method was the appropriate method in the case, and the rating authority could not therefore be said to have acted ultra vires its powers; (2) that the omission of the rule-making authority to frame rules could not take away the right of the Municipal Council to levy tax at the rate mentioned in the notification under S. 81 (3) of the District Municipalities Act; (3) that though the committee which fixed the capital value had no legal status under the act to make any assessment, since the appellant company asked for a committee, it could not object to the tax levied on the basis of the value fixed by the committee as being illegal; (4) that the provisions of the Act had in substance and in effect been complied with and therefore S. 354 (2) of the District Municipalities Act barred the suit. ——S. 267-A—Scope and effect—Owner of private market—Right to prevent Municipality from opening new market.

The owner of a private market in a Municipality is not entitled to prevent the Municipality from opening a new market. S. 267-A of the Madras District Municipalities Act does not impliedly give such a right. All that that section says is that it is open to the Municipal Council to acquire the rights of any person to hold a private market. That does not confer any right on the owner of a private market to compel the Municipality to acquire his right and not to open a new market. There is no such thing as a market franchise or a right to hold a market conferred by grant from the Crown in Madras. The English common law rule that the owner of a private market can prevent another market being opened within a radius of 62 miles, is an artificial rule and is not countenanced even in England as a sound one. It is not a rule based on any equity or good conscience which would compel Courts in India to adopt it. ——S. 306 (28)—Construction and scope—Bye law authorising levy of licence fees for advertisements—If ultra vires.

The intention of S. 306, Cl. 28 of the District Municipalities Act, is to empower the Municipality to prohibit altogether advertisements in public streets or parks or to regulate their exhibition, but the section does not confer expressly or impliedly any power on a Municipality to levy licence fees in respect of advertisements. A bye-law framed by a Municipality authorising the levy of licence fees for advertisements is therefore ultra vires, and the contravention of such a bye-law is not an offence for which the offender can be convicted. MADRAS ELECTORAL RULES, R. 48—Claim for return of deposit by unsuccessful candidate for election to a seat in the Legislative Council—Forfeiture of deposit and rejection of claim by Returning Officer affirmed by Local Government—Suit in Civil Court for recovery of amount—Maintainability.

An unsuccessful candidate for election to a seat in the Legislative Council held on 10th March, 1930, applied for the refund of his deposit to the Returning Officer who passed an order declaring that the deposit was forfeited to the Government. The petition to the Local Government against the order was rejected and the candidate filed a suit in the Civil Court for the recovery of the amount deposited by him. On the question of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain the suit, Held, that the decision of the Government must for the purposes of the case be taken to be the decision of the Governor under R. 48 of the Electoral Rules which says that the question shall be referred for the decision of the Governor whose decision shall be final. The Governor, the only competent tribunal, having decided the case against the candidate a suit does not lie in the Civil Court to recover the deposit. The Civil Court would have jurisdiction only if the proper tribunal had declined jurisdiction and the aggrieved party was bereft of his statutory and constitutional remedy. (1938) 2 M. MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT (I OF 1908), Ss. 3 (5), 77-A and 112—Proceedings initiated by one co-sharer without joining others—Validity.

The term 'landholder' in Ss. 77-A and 112 of the Madras Estates Land Act must have the same meaning as under S. 3 (5) and in the case of a divided family it is not open to the elder brother to represent his minor brother and act as his guardian without being appointed as such under the Guardians and Wards Act and it is not competent for one co-sharer to initiate proceedings to exercise the power of sale under Ss. 111 and 112 without joining the other co-sharer. Under S. 3 (5) the Collector can recognise one person as a landholder if there is more than one landholder, only if there is a dispute between the landholders and not wherethe dispute is raised only by a ryot. Need for amendment of S. 3 (5) in the interests of the landholders and ryots pointed out. (Venkataramana Rao, J.) ETHIRAJA MUDALIAR v. MURUGESA MUDALIAR.

——S. 6 (6)—Scope and effect of—Ijardar—Right of to bring ryot's holding to sale for arrears of rent and purchase it himself.

The right of occupancy referred to in S. 6 (6) is the right of permanent occupancy and anything short of this may be purchased by the ijardar. The right of permanent occupancy is not the only right of occupancy contemplated by the Act. Ss. 6 and 8 of the Act read in conjunction with S. 46 of the Act also show that a person can be in lawful possession of ryoti land for purposes of agriculture without having a permanent right of occupation. Consequently, S. 6 (6) does not operate as a bar to the ijardar purchasing at the auction the holding of his ryot put up for sale by him for arrears of rent. The omission of the word "permanent" in S. 6 (6) makes no difference. If after his purchase he lets in a tenant during the period of the ijara the tenant will automatically acquire a permanent right of occupancy. If he does not let in a tenant the ijardar will be left on the expiration of his lease merely with the right to possession of a non-occupancy ryot. The decision of the Collector is in the nature of an order only, and the appeal against such order must be regarded to be a continuation of the proceedings before the Collector and the decision by the District Court on appeal cannot be characterised as a decree. The expression "defaulter" in S. 112 of the Madras Estates Land Act denotes not only the person who is the registered pattadar or the heir of the registered pattadar or the person whom the landholder has become bound to recognise as the ryot by reason of the provisions of S. 146, but also includes a person who has been accepted by the landholder as his ryot and has defaulted in the payment of his rent. The landholder may recognise a transferee of a registered pattadar without any formality and if he does the transferee becomes a ryot within the meaning of the Act. But before action can be taken under S. 112, S. 53 requires that the landholder shall have issued a patta, to the transferee, not necessarily bearing his name, but if a patta which is intended to be the transferee's patta though bearing the name of the transferor is accepted by the transferee all the provisions of the Act apply to the relationship between the landholder and the transferee. ——S. 151—Construction—Action under section——Grounds for—Building compound wall to prevent trespass of cattle—Digging land and laying foundations for erecting structure—Effect of.

The Courts have nothing to do with the policy of rural reconstruction in construing a statutory provision like S. 151 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The object of S. 151, is that the value of the land as agricultural land should be strictly maintained and any attempt made by the tenant to divert the land for non agricultural purposes should be prohibited. He can only make such improvements as are necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the holding. He cannot be allowed to take the law into his own hands and plead, nor should the Court take the view that it is enough that the landlord is given compensation. The erection of a compound wall to the holding to prevent cattle, etc., from trespassing into it is valid, and would be an improvement within the meaning of S 3 (4) (d) of the Estates Land Act, because it is necessary for the convenient enjoyment of the holding by preventing the trespass of cattle into the fields; the erection of a compound wall cannot be made a ground of complaint by the landlord for maintaining an action under S. 151 of the Act The fact that the tenant digs up the land and lays foundations for constructing a super tructure cannot also necessarily be made a ground for action under S. 151. The tenant may put up a structure on a reasonable portion of the holding to be used as a farm house or for the purpose of storing crops raised on the holding but not for the purpose of storing grain purchased elsewhere from others or for using the same for any business carried on by him. S 163 of the Madras Estates Land Act provides the ordinary machinery whereby a landlord can recover rent and damages for unauthorised occupation of ryoti land. The section, though not very explicit, is intended to cover the usual case in which a person cultivates ryoti land on the implied understanding that he will, when asked to do so, pay the rent for it. If, however, the landlord does not desire that the occupant should continue in occupation of his land, he may treat him as a trespasser, in which case a machinery is provided under S. 163-A whereby a suit may be filed, and the landlord may claim mesne profits and also damages which are to be assessed on the basis given in S. 163. S. 163 A is not intended to provide a machinery for collecting mesne profits from unauthorised occupants except as an incident of their eviction by suit. Where the landlord has bought in the property at a revenue sale, he can get delivery without suit by proceedings under S. 124. If he refrains from taking these proceedings it is a reasonable inference that he is prepared to accept any damages which can be claimed under S. 163 from the actual occupant during the interval between the sale and the delivery. It is very doubtful whether landlord can abstain from taking action either under S. 124 or S. 163 and then file a suit under S. 163-A, after possession has been surrendered. Still less is it clear that the landlord, having got possession without a suit, can bring a separate suit merely for mesne profits. The underlying idea is that a person who has unauthorisedly occupied ryoti land and has not been evicted by a suit shall be liable to pay such sum as can be claimed under S. 163. There being a special remedy provided by the Act whereby the landlord can recover compensation for unauthorised occupation of ryoti land in cases where a suit for eviction is unnecessary, it is not possible to claim in the ordinary Civil Courts a different remedy with an enhanced period of limitation for the same wrong. ——Ss. 181 and 187 (1) (c)—Scope and effect of—Private lands in estate—Sale by landholder reserving melwaram to himself—Effect—Vendee agreeing to pay fixed rent and interest on arrears of rent—If creates ryoti tenure—Construction of deed.

Per Chief Justice and Venkataramana Rao, J.—Where a landholder possesses private land within an "estate" and sells the kudivaram right in those lands, retaining the melwaram, he must be deemed to have converted the lands into ryoti lands, and additional terms in the deed of sale would not alter the nature of the transaction. Such terms would stand, provided they are not inconsistent with what the statute states should apply to ryoti tenure. To the extent that the additional terms are inconsistent with a ryoti tenure, they should be regarded as void. A "Khat" or counterpart of a lease embodying the terms of a contract between the appellants, who were the mokhasadars of a village, and the first respondent which after reciting that the appellants had agreed to sell to the 1st respondent the kudivaram right in their kambattam or homefarm lands, provided: "You have hereby sold to us all the rights possessed by you in the said lands excepting the melwaram rights thereto. Therefore, in the matter of our enjoying the said lands henceforth from son to grandson and so on in succession with powers of alienation by way of gift, exchange, sale, etc., you or your heirs shall never raise disputes either with us or with our heirs;" the deed further stipulated for the payment of a fixed rent, for the payment of interest at 10 annas per cent. per mensem as arrears of rent, and another clause stipulated that the cist payable to the landholder should be a first charge on the land. Finally it was provided that the appellants should be entitled to the trees on the land on that date but that those grown after that date should belong to the respondent, etc.

Held (by the Chief Justice and Venkataramana Row, J.), that the appellants could have sold the lands in suit to the respondent absolutely or they could have leased them at any rent they might have agreed upon without separating the kudivaram right from the melwaram right, but as they chose to separate the kudivaram right from the melwaram right and grant a permanent right of occupancy on the payment of rent relating to the melwaram right, they should be deemed to have converted the lands into ryoti lands.

Per Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.— The clauses relating to the fixity of rent and payment of interest on arrears specifically agreed to and undoubtedly intended to be operative, created incidents which were not only foreign to ryoti tenure under the Madras Estates Land Act, but materially opposed to it. It was not for the Court to evaluate the terms of a deed for the purpose of accepting some and rejecting others. On the contrary every rule of law and every rule of equity would seem to prohibit its doing so. It was not for a Court to infer a tenure by taking into account some only of the terms of a contract ignoring others, when it was possible and it was permissible to give effect to all the terms by treating it as a special contract and one not entered into for the purpose of impressing a ryoti tenure on the land comprised in the 'Khat". The conveyance of that species of right known as the kudivaram interest would not amount to the creation of a ryoti tenure in the lands conveyed. (*Leach, C. A suit to contest the right of a holding can only be brought in a Revenue Court. S. 189 (3) does not detract from absolute prohibition contained in S. 189 (1). It only means that where a matter has been decided in a Revenue Court and the decision there is one of the factors in a civil suit, the finding of the Revenue Court cannot be questioned and must be taken as conclusive on the particular point at issue in the civil suit. Consequently, where notice has been duly served upon a defaulting ryot he must file a suit in a Revenue Court within 30 days; otherwise he will be precluded from challenging the sale on any of the grounds which could be urged in a suit under S. 112 of the Act. A raiyat having failed to pay the arrears of rent, the land was purchased in Court auction by the landholder who took delivery. The raiyat, however, continued to occupy the land; the landholder thereupon sued to eject him, got a decree and obtained delivery of possession through the Civil Court. In spite of this the raiyat trespassed into the land notwithstanding the objection of the landholder, refused to vacate and ploughed the land and raised crops.

——S. 213—Applicability—Suit by person other than tenant or registered pattadar—"Any person aggrieved."

S. 213 of the Madras Estates Land Act is not inapplicable to a suit for damages brought by a person who is not a tenant suing his landlord. Such a suit would lie not merely at the instance of the registered pattadar or other person actually impleaded as defaulter in the original proceedings but would also apply to a suit brought at the instance of any other person coming within the category of those who under S. 131 have a right to set aside the sale on deposit of the amount due. The words "any person aggrieved" in S. 213 would cover any person who had any interest in the land in question and would include a mortgagee of the kudiwaram interest. ——S. 213—Scope—Sale of holding for decree for amount not due to zamindar—Suit to recover money paid to set aside such sale—Claim against zamindar and against tenants who were bound to pay alleged dues—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

A suit for compensation for a payment which the plaintiff was obliged to make owing to the tortious act of the defendant under colour of the procedure laid down in the Madras Estates Land Act and for relief on the ground of fraud under colour of the Act falls under S. 213, Madras Estates Land Act and lies only in a Revenue Court, and the Civil Courts have clearly no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit in view of Ss. 213 and 189 of the Act. Petitioner held a decree on a mortgage binding lands in an estate, the kudiwaram interest in which was owned by defendants 3, 4 and 5. Defendant No. 1 was the zamindar, who in 1929 obtained an ex parte decree against 3 to 5 for watercess alleged to be due on their land within an inam. Under that decree a sale was held and a portion of the land was purchased by defendant No. 2. The petitioner came to know of this and got the sale set aside by paying the amount due under the ex parte decree on 17—1—1930. On 17—1- 1933, he brought a suit in the Civil Court alleging a fraudulent conspiracy between the 1st defendant and defendants 3, 4 and 5, whereby a decree was obtained for an amount not due and the land was sold to the 2nd defendant, a friend of the parties. He therefore claimed the right to get back from the 1st defendant and defendants 3 to 5, the amount which he was obliged to pay to get the sale set aside. He also claimed that the claim of the 1st defendant was based on fraud, that the amounts if really due to 1st defendant was due from defendants 3 to 5, and that as they defaulted and were responsible for the sale, they were bound in law to make good the said amount paid by him with interest.

Held, (1) that in so far as the plaint sought relief against the defendants 1, 3, 4 and 5 on the ground of fraud under colour of the Estates Land Act, the Civil Court clearly had no jurisdiction in view of the terms of Ss. 213 and 189 of the Act; (2) that the alternative prayer, based under S. 39 of the Contract Act, against defendants 3 to 5, was one which the Civil Court alone could entertain and which the Revenue Court could not entertain. The Provincial Legislature can levy a tax on the sale by a person who obtains the goods from the manufacturer or producer and so on when the goods pass from hand to hand, but it has no power to tax a sale by the manufacturer or producer himself as this would mean an imposition of excise duty and the assumption of a power vested only in the centre. Entry No. 45 in the Federal List and Entry No. 48 in the Provincial List can be reconciled by reading into the latter entry a power to tax all sales subsequent to the sale by the manufacturer or producer, that is when the property in the goods has passed beyond the manufacturer or producer and the goods have become part of the general stock of the province. Notwithstanding that the tax imposed by the Madras General Sales Tax Act is based on turnover, it is in fact a tax on sales and in so far as it imposes a tax on first sales of goods manufactured or produced within the province it is ultra vires the Provincial Legislature. S. 21 of the Act bars the Civil Court from entertaining such a suit. A suit by an assignee of the rajabhogam of the paddy grown on lands forming the emoluments of the village blacksmith, against the tenant of the holder of the office who has transferred the rajabhogam to the plaintiff is not a suit by a person claiming as a holder of a village office, and the bar of S. 21 read with S. 13 does not apply so as to take away the Civil Court's jurisdiction. MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS ACT (II OF 1927), S. 9 (5)—Excepted temple—Succession by hereditary right—What is—C.P. Code, S. 115 —Lower Court misdirecting itself—Interference.

A temple was governed by a scheme under which none but the lineal descendants of a particular person between the ages of 25 and 50 and permanently residing within 50 miles of the temple could be a trustee of the temple and that no two members of the joint family should at the same time be trustees and that of the five trustees three should belong to one branch and two to another branch of the descendants of the person named. Trustees were to hold office for 5 years and were to be elected by the whole body of the adult lineal descendants of that person. The scheme while recognising the right of that person's descendants to appoint trustees from out of their number prescribed a mode of succession to the office which was essentially elective and not hereditary. In a proceeding under S. 84 (2) of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act in which the question was as to whether the temple was excepted or not, the District Judge overlooked the fact that the actual trusteeship did not reside in the general body of the descendants of the person named but that they should constitute the electoral body and only such descendants were qualified for election, and did not take into consideration the mode of succession to the trusteeship during the period immediately preceding the application to the Board and declared that the temple was an excepted temple under S. 9 (5) of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act.

Held, (1) that the District Judge had wholly misdirected himself regarding the basis for the decision of the matter before him and acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction so as to justify interference by the High Court under S. 115, C. P. Code; (2) that though the power of election under the scheme and the qualification for election were hereditary, the succession was not hereditary; (3) that the temple in question was not a temple the succession to the trusteeship whereof was hereditary, having regard to the provisions of the scheme; and (4) that the temple should therefore be declared a non-excepted temple. ——S. 9 (5) and (6)—Scope—Cl. (6) if to be read into Cl. (5)—Temple trustee succeeding by nomination by predecessor—If temple "excepted"

The definition of a "hereditary trustee" in S. 9 (6) of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act enumerates four methods of devolution which qualify a trustee to be known as a hereditary trustee. Of these four methods of devolution only the first and the last have been specified as qualifying a temple to be considered an excepted temple under S. 9 (5) of the Act. On the general rule expressio unius exclusio alterius it is impossible to resist the inference that when the legislature in the definition of an excepted temple specified only two of the four types of devolution which are recognised in the definition of a hereditary trustee they intended to exclude the other two types of devolution. It follows therefore that a temple whose trustee succeeds by nomination by his predecessor or merely in accordance with usage does not come within the definition of an excepted temple. The definition of a hereditary trustee in Cl. (6) of S. 9 cannot be read into the definition of an excepted temple in Cl. (5) of S. 9. (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) T. V. Where a Zamindar, lets the right to catch fish in a tank in his zamindari, he can be called upon to pay land-cess under S. 78 of the Madras Local Boards Act. There can be no doubt that land which holds a tank in which there are fish has a rental value because the right to catch fish can be let. If the owner of the tank merely sells the right to catch for a period without any right in the purchaser to use for this purpose the bed of the fishery, the purchaser cannot be deemed to be in occupation of the land which holds the fishery, and the owner being in beneficial occupation of the land forming the bed of his tank, land-cess is leviable on the value of the land, which is to be gauged by the value of the right to fish in the water lying above the land. The application of S. 159 of the Madras Local Boards Act, which empowers the president of the Local Board to require the owner or occupier of any premises to remove an encroachment, does not depend upon the extent to which such encroachment is objectionable. The president has a right to have the encroachment removed; and if the person who encroaches of the land of the panchayat refuses to obey the president's order, he makes himself liable to a fine by a criminal court under S. 207 (1) of the Act. The fact that the president of the Board and the person making the encroachment are of opposite factions in the panchayat is irrelevant. The powers of the president are none the less because he dislikes the person making the encroachment. (Horwill, J.) PRESIDENT, PANCHAYAT BOARD, MANGALAGIRI v. KOTAYYA. (1941) 2 M.L.J. 1034.

A lessee from a Local Board under S. 160 (3) of the Madras Local Boards Act, of a road side site, on which he constructed a small shed, did not quit the land at the end of the period of the lease, and a notice was therefore sent to him, purporting to be one under S. 159 (1), requiring him to remove the shed within a fortnight and threatening, in default, proceedings under the Act. He ignored the notice and thereupon a prosecution was launched for an offence punishable under S. 159 (1) read with S. 207 (1) (a) and (c) of the Madras Local Boards Act.

Held, that though notice should have gone to the lessee under S. 164 (2) and not under S. 159 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act, and though the notice sent to him did not purport to be a notice under S. 164 (2) but one under S. 159 (1), that did not make any material difference as the notice made it very clear what was required of him; and by disobeying the lawful notice sent to him, even though it was labelled S. 159 (1) and not S. 164 (2), the lessee committed an offence and was liable to a penalty under S. 164 (1) of the Act. ——S. 199—Surcharge Rules, Rr. 5 and 6—Scope—Powers of auditor and powers of Civil Court—Jurisdiction to go into merits of surcharge order.

In two criminal cases in which subordinates of a Union Panchayat Board were concerned, the president acting under his emergency powers conferred on him by S. 22 of the Local Boards Act made payments to advocates in anticipation of the Board's sanction in excess of the scale which the Board itself could sanction. The Panchayat Board to which the payments were reported duly ratified them. Objection being taken by the auditor because of the failure to obtain the Government's sanction as required by the rules, an application was made to the Government to sanction these payments, but it was rejected ; the auditor therefore surcharged the president. The District Judge set aside the surcharge orders on the ground that the members of the Board who ratified the president's action were equally responsible and that it was inequitable to place the whole burden on the president alone.

Held, in revision, (1) that the surcharge order made by the auditor on the president was not illegal, because R. 5 of the Surcharge Rules clearly permitted the auditor to surcharge either the person who made the payment or the person who authorised the payment to be made; (2) that there was no limitation put by R. 6 of the Surcharge Rules upon the powers of the Civil Court, in dealing with an application to set aside a surcharge order, and the Civil Court had jurisdiction in a proper case to remit a surcharge which, though legally recoverable, should equitably have been placed upon persons other than the person surcharged; the Civil Court's jurisdiction was not limited to merely ascertaining whether a surcharge was in accordance with law or not without any power to go into the merits of the surcharge ; (3) that though the District Judge should have upheld the surcharge on the president to the extent of his proportionate share as a member of the Panchayat Board, it was not desirable to interfere with the decision in revision (Wadsworth, J.) EXAMINER OF LOCAL FUND ACCOUNTS v. RAMASWAMI CHETTIAR.

——S. 207—Applicability—Prosecution for non-compliance with notice under S. 123—Offence found as made out—Acquittal on ground that result of objection petition was not communicated to accused—Sustainability.

The accused was prosecuted on the complaint of the President of a Panchayat Board under Ss. 123 and 207 of the Madras Local Boards Act, for storing manure in a pit causing danger to the health and offensive to the neighbourhood and failure to remove the manure and to close the pit in compliance with the notice lawfully issued to him under the Act. The accused in answer to the notice issued to him presented an objection petition contending that the pit was not insanitary and criticising the administration of the Panchayat. This was presented beyond time, but the Panchayat Board considered the same and decided that the manure pit was insanitary and sanctioned his prosecution. The Magistrate held that the pit was insanitary, but he acquitted the accused on the ground that the result of the objection petition filed by him was not proved to have been ever communicated to him.

Held, in revision, that the magistrate having found in effect that the accused was guilty under S. 207 of the Local Boards Act, the order of acquittal on the ground of non communication of the result of the objection petition was unsustainable and must be set aside. ——S. 225—Scope—Death caused by fall of tree on cart passing along road—Suit for damages for negligence under Fatal Accidents Act—Limitation—Suit after 6 months—Bar of—Liability of public bodies.

The 1st plaintiff's wife, and two small sons aged 3 years and 1 year, were killed as the result of a fall of a tree standing on a District Board road on the cart on which they were travelling. The first plaintiff and his remaining three minor children sued the District Board for damages under the Fatal Accidents Act on account of the accident, which the plaintiff alleged was caused by the negligence of the defendant. The suit was filed exactly one year after the accident, which was the period of limitation under the Fatal Accidents Act.

Held, that since it was alleged that the defendant wrongfully neglected to cut down the tree which was a menace to persons passing along the road, it followed that in the words of S. 225 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act there was a default on the part of the defendant in the execution of the Act, and the suit fell under S. 225 ; and not having been brought within 6 months as required by S. 225 (2), was barred by limitation. The mere fact that the plaintiffs had a cause of action under the Fatal Accidents Act would not save the bar of limitation under S. 225 of the Local Boards Act.

MAD. LOCAL BOARDS ACT (1920). S. 225.

Held, further, that the only damages for which the defendant could be liable were those arising out of any financial or pecuniary loss which the plaintiffs suffered on account of the death of the first plaintiff's wife and children.

——S. 228 (2)—Scope and effect—Compliance with provisions of Act—Burden of proof—Assessee submitting returns and producing income-tax demand notices—President of Board not considering same but making own classification—Effect of.

The respondents who were residents within a Union Panchayat were assessed to profession tax on a classification made by the President of the Panchayat Board which was not in accordance with the returns made by them. On notices being served on them to submit returns of income, the respondents duly submitted the returns as required by R. 11-A, sub-R. (1) of Sch. IV of the Madras Local Boards Act. Some of the respondents also submitted income-tax demand notices. There was no evidence that the President was satisfied that the returns were incorrect or incomplete. The respondents having paid the taxes sued for refund of the amounts paid on the ground that the assessment had been made arbitrarily, unjustly and incorrectly.

Held, that the suits were not barred under S. 228 (2) of the Madras Local Boards Act; the burden was on the Panchayat Board to show that the provisions of the Act with regard to assessment had been in substance and effect complied with, and merely because the President did not accept the returns and made his own assignments of classes to the respondents for the purpose of profession-tax, it could not be deemed that he was satisfied that the returns were incorrect or incomplete. Further in cases where income-tax notices were submitted they ought to be accepted as conclusive for the purpose of classification under the Explanation to R. 11 A.

Held, further, that the failure on the part of the Board to take notice of the account books produced with the appeal did not by itself amount to sufficient non-compliance with the provisions of the Act. S. 229 does not make all molestation punishable but only molestation of a person in the performance of his duty. It does not make punishable a molestation during the course of the performance of the duty, but in the performance of the duty. The language employed by S. 20 of the Malabar Tenancy Act is plain and peremptory, and prohibits a suit for eviction being instituted except on one or more of the several grounds specified in that section. There are no words in it showing an intention on the part of the legislature to save contracts entered into before or after the Act. Consequently a contract between the landlord and the tenant entered into before the Act and conferring a right of eviction on grounds other than those enumerated in S. 20 cannot be enforced at the instance of the landlord. In construing S. 14 of the Malabar Tenancy Act, it must be borne in mind that the object of the Act was to confer a right of permanent occupancy on the tenant, and the exceptions contained in the section must therefore be strictly construed; the landlord who relies on a particular ground must satisfy the Court beyond reasonable doubt that that ground exists. Under Cl. (5) of the section which has been inserted in the interests of the landlord, a mere desire on his part, even if bona fide, to have the land for his own cultivation is not enough; the Court in each case must consider whether the circumstances are such that the land must be restored to the landlord for his own cultivation or cultivation by any member of his family or tarwad. The real test is the need of the landlord. The word "requires" in the clause cannot be interpreted as meaning desires. the petitioner contended that in prohibiting the possession of intoxicating liquor the Madras Prohibition Act was ultra vires the Provincial Legislature and therefore the conviction must be quashed.

Held, that under Cl. 31 of the Provincial Legislative List in the seventh schedule to the Government of India Act, the Provincial Legislature had full power to legislate with regard to the production, manufacture, possession, transport and sale of intoxicating liquors, while Cl. 19 of the Federal List gave the Central Legislature power to legislate with regard to import and export across frontiers. S 4 (1) (a) of the Prohibition Act prohibited inter alia the possession of intoxicating liquors. Since in the present case, which was merely concerned with the possession of arrack produced in the Madras Presidency there was no question of any import or export, the conviction was lawful as the Provincial Legislature had power to prohibit the possession of arrack. MADRAS REVENUE RECOVERY ACT (II OF 1864)—Procedure—Sale after death of defaulter—Heirs not substituted in registry—Failure to serve notice on them or to fix fresh date—Effect on sale.

The Madras Revenue Recovery Act contemplates the continued existence of the defaulter till the date of the sale, and if, before such date, the defaulter dies, the sale would be infructuous and would pass no title to the purchaser Where, therefore, a registered ryotwari pattadar dies before the date fixed for sale for recovery of the arrears of revenue due by him, the proper course for the revenue authorities would be to register the heirs of the deceased as owners in the revenue registers, serve notices on them and fix a fresh date for sale, or to start the whole procedure de novo by issuing a fresh demand and taking further steps as provided in the Act. A sale after the defaulter's death without following such a course is consequently invalid. (Venkataramana Rao, J.) THIRUVENGADAM PILLAI v. KOOLAI.

All that is necessary under S. 38 (3) of the Revenue Recovery Act before setting aside a sale is that the Collector should have reason to think that the sale ought to be set aside, so that, if the Collector gives any substantial reasons why a sale should be set aside, his order is good. It is not necessary that he should find that there was a material irregularity; it is not also necessary that he should find that that the price was unduly low.

MAD. SUR. & BOUND. ACT (1897), S. 14.

Still is it necessary that the Collector should come to the conclusion that the lowness of the price was a direct result of some material irregularity. Where there is ample evidence before the Collector to justify the setting aside of a sale held under S. 38 (1) of the Revenue Recovery Act, it cannot be held that the Civil Court can set aside that sale merely because the applicant for setting aside the sale fails to adduce the same evidence before the Civil Court. Where the executive authority acts in some illegal or improper or arbitrary manner, then and only then can a Civil Court interfere with the order passed. ——Dower—Prompt dower—Portion not fixed by any agreement—Demand, if a condition precedent to suit for dower—Form and nature of demand.

When the prompt dower of a Mahomedan wife is an ascertained sum under a contract or under a custom it may be possible to hold under the terms of the contract as a matter of construction that the demand for payment of dower was a part of the contract and an integral part of the cause of action. Even in such a case it may be possible to hold as a matter of Mahomedan law having regard to the relation of husband and wife that it is such a relationship in which the creditor has to seek the debtor and the debtor has not to seek the creditor and in such a case an antecedent demand may be necessary to make a cause of action. But these considerations do not apply to a case where the prompt dower has not been fixed either under agreement or by custom and the

MAHOMEDAN LAW—Dower.

Court has to determine the amount after contest. In such a case demand can only be for settlement of claim of dower and for fixation of amount by negotiation and agreement. In such a case it cannot be said as a matter of Mahomedan Law that a previous demand and refusal of payment of an unascertained sum of dower is part of the contract of payment of dower and is necessarily a part of the cause of action of the plaintiff A suit in such circumstances is at once a suit for determination of the amount and for its recovery and for the success of such a suit a previous demand and refusal is not a condition precedent. If a demand were necessary, it will be sufficient, if she makes a demand generally for the settlement of her prompt dower without limiting herself to any definite sum or she may treat her entire dower as prompt and make a demand for it or she may make a demand for a lesser sum and in each case a demand so made will entitle her later on to reduce her claim before enforcing it without being under the necessity to make a fresh demand of the precise sum which she eventually decides to enforce by an action in Court. ——Dower—Prompt dower —Portion not fixed—Considerations to as to fixing.

Where the proportion to be treated as prompt dower has to be fixed by Court, the essential matters to be taken note of are no doubt the status of the woman and the amount of the dower fixed. But it is permissible to the Court to look to other circumstances as well. There is no practice of Court governing the proportion of the prompt dower and each case must be decided on its own merits. Although prompt dower, according to Mahomedan Law is payable immediately on demand, yet in a large majority of cases it is rarely demanded and is rarely paid ; in practice a Mahomedan husband generally gives little thought to the question of paying dower to his wife save when there is domestic disagreement, or when the wife presses for payment upon the husband's embarking upon a course of extravagance and indebtedness without making any provision for her. The right cannot legitimately be linked with the right of the father, if any, to the custody of the children and the father being the legal guardian is also beside the point. ———Marriage—Dissolution—Charge of adultery—Retraction—Principle of.

It is well established that a marriage can be dissolved only by a decree of the Court, and the Court has got to determine judicially whether a charge of adultery was or was not unjustly made. It has also been held in accordance with the spirit of Mahomedan law relating to lian that the husband has the right to retract the charge he made, though by doing so, he renders himself liable to punishment for slander and on retractment of the accusation, the wife's suit fails. The purpose behind this principle of retraction is obviously to give the husband a locus poenitentiae. An unretracted accusation of this kind cannot but render conjugal affection impossible, but if there is a bona fide retraction in the written statement, the Court should not order dissolution of the marriage. The rule of Mahomedan Law which entitles a wife who has become a convert to Islam to dissolve her marriage on the refusal of her husband to adopt Islam after its presentation to him, does not apply to Muslims with a foreign domicile. If, therefore, a woman who is converted to Islam in a country in which Islamic law is in force, has a foreign domicile, she cannot be allowed to dissolve a Christian marriage contracted by her by observing the procedure prescribed for this purpose by the above-mentioned rule. By the expression "Christian marriage", it must not be taken to mean a marriage celebrated in a Christian church according to the formalities prescribed by any particular Christian sect. A Christian marriage may be celebrated with equal efficacy according to civil rites and is merely a marriage which precludes the possibility of a marriage with another person during the lifetime of the first spouse, unless the first marriage has been duly dissolved by the lex fori of the country in which the parties to the marriage are domiciled A marriage celebrated even in Soviet Russia is in essence a Christian marriage, although the present law of Russia may possibly provide parties to it with facilities for its dissolution, which do not exist in English Law. If a woman who has contracted a Christian marriage and has thereby acquired her husband's Russian domicile, becomes a convert to Islam in India and seeks the dissolution of the marriage her right to obtain the relief which she seeks must be decided in the Russian Courts and does not depend in ———Marriage—Dissolution—Rule entitling convert to Islam to dissolve marriage on refusal of unconverted spouse to adopt Islam—Procedure prescribed—Rule, if applicable in India.

The rule of Mahomedan Law which entitles a wife who has become a convert to Islam in an Islamic country to dissolve her marriage on the refusal of her husband to adopt Islam after its presentation to him, lays down that Islam is to be presented to the unconverted party by the kazi and, on refusal by him to embrace the faith, the kazi must pronounce a decree of divorce. The authorities on Mahomedan Law envisage the actual physical presence of the parties before the kazi and, in the absence of the unconverted party, it is difficult to see how Islam can be effectively presented to him. A mere request by a cable from a convert to her husband asking him to embrace Islam is not sufficient to constitute a valid offer of the faith to the unconverted party. In any case, it is the kazi and not the convert who should present Islam to the unconverted party and it is for him in a suitable case to pronounce a decree dissolving the marriage. It is, of course, essential for the convert to satisfy him that her conversion is of a bona fide character. It is not, however, the law of India that convert to Islam can obtain dissolution of his or her marriage by complying with the procedure prescribed by this rule. The rule must be regarded as obsolete and contrary to public policy. It is not also in accordance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, as it conflicts with the most fundamental principles of English Law, which are followed in India in matrimonial cases. It is unsupported by the provision of any statute and does not form part of the common law. (Edgley, J.) NOOR JEHAN BEGUM v. EUGENE TISCENKO.

———Marriage—Minor— Contract by guardian for marriage on behalf of minor husband relating to divorce—Validity.

Under Mahomedan Law, a person cannot contract a marriage, unless he or she is of sound mind and has attained puberty. But even if the parties are minors, consent on his or her behalf can be expressed by the guardian for marriage, who is legally authorised to make a valid contract of marriage. The terms of such a contract are enforceable in a Court of law if they are not incompatible with any rule or policy of Mahomedan Law. An agreement entered into by the father of a minor husband acting as a guardian for marriage authorising the wife to effect a divorce if the husband takes a second wife without her consent, does not contravene any principle of Mahomedan Law, and is valid and enforceable against the husband. On the purchase of a share in the estate by a stranger the co sharer plaintiff instituted a suit for pre-emption, But between the date of the pre-emption sale and the date of the institution of the pre-emption suit the defendant purchaser purchased the interest of another co-sharer in the estate. The title of the defendant to the second share had not completely matured on the date of the pre-emption decree of the trial Court as the period of limitation for a suit to pre-empt the second share had not then expired:

Held, that the defendant's title to the second share could not be said to have stood on an equal footing with that of the plaintiff on the date of the decree of the trial Court inasmuch as he could not be said to have acquired an indefeasible title to that share on that date and therefore the purchase by the defendant of a second share in the estate after the pre-emption sale could not affect the plaintiff's right to pre-empt the first share purchased by defendant. ——Wakf — Subject-matter — Property previously leased out by wakif — Shia law.

Per Mitter, J.—All property which produces income or profits and which would not be consumed by use can be dedicated by way of wakf, except those which are expressly excluded by the Muslim jurists. The condition of delivery of possession does not require that there should in all cases be physical delivery. The nature of the delivery would depend upon the nature of the subject and the purpose for which the subject has to be applied according to the terms of the wakfnama. A property which has been leased out at a rent cannot be possessed by the landlord in khas. Through receipt of rent he possesses the subject. If he grants lease and thereafter makes wakf of such property he can transfer his possession to the mutwalli by asking the lessee to attorn to the mutwalli or by authorising the mutwalli to receive the rent reserved by the lease. That is the only way in which he can deliver possession to another. If the wakfnama directs the income to be utilised for the object of the wakf, the inclusion of a property previously leased out by the wakf would not render the wakf invalid. In fact the Muslim jurists recognise that a property which is subject to a lease in favour of a third person can be made the subject-matter of a wakf. Before the determination of the lease the lessor's profits would be appropriated to the purposes of the wakf and would enure to its benefit, and after determination of the lease the profits which had been intercepted by the lease would automatically enure to the benefit of the wakf by way of accretion.

Per Khundkar, J.—Where property which is subject to a lease is made the subject of a wakf, there is an immediate appropriation of property in the actual possession, presumably of tenants who were paying rent to a lessee from the settlor, the latter being at the time of the dedication under a contractual liability to pay rent to the wakif. What is immediately appropriated as corpus is the property, to which attaches the right to receive in the present a smaller rent from one person, the lessee, and to receive in the future a large rent from other persons, the tenants who happen to be in actual or khas possession. The delivery of seisin is effected by vesting in the endowment the right to receive rent. (Mitter and Khundkar, JJ.) MAHOMED HASHIM ALI KHAN v. IFFAT ARA HAMIDI BEGUM. 74 C.L.J. 261.

Per Mitter, J. - A provision in a wakfnama for a reserve fund to be applied for the improvement and extension of the wakf and in rebuilding a mosque and imambara on certain contingencies cannot invalidate the wakf. The benefit of reserve fund is to result to objects of the wakf. The income of the property dedicated being trust money, so to say, any property acquired from a portion of the accumulated income of those properties, that is the portion which goes to make up the reserve fund, would be impressed by the trust.

Per Khundkar, J—The moment there is a change in the character of possession of the wakif, the entire property, both corpus and income, becomes impressed with the trust. That share of the income which is to be accumulated is as much an asset of the wakf as is the corpus itself. The future application of this fund to the erection of a mosque and imambara, or its investment in other immovable properties will amount to no more than the conversion of one form of wealth (money) into another form of wealth, land and buildings. MAHOMEDAN LAW—Wakf.

A trust for charity simpliciter, so long as it is confined to charity exclusively, is a perfectly good trust and it is not necessary that the objects of trust or charity need be specified. This is the English law as also the Indian law. If a Mahomedan settlor creates a wakf in favour of the poor or a trust for religious, pious or charitable purposes of a permanent character recognized by Mahomedan Law without specifying the religious, pious or charitable objects or he makes a trust for religious, pious or charitable purposes of a permanent character recognized by Mahomedan Law either one or the other or all or in any combination, such a trust would be perfectly valid and should not fail simply because the objects were not specified. A trust for khairat or a trust for khairati kam is a perfectly good trust and khairat and khairati kam should be taken as equivalent to charity and charitable objects, and in such a case specification of objects of charity is not necessary. If a trust is for umure khair or kare khair it is a question of construction in what sense the expression is used and if it is used in the sense of benevolent purposes or good purposes, the trust will be void for uncertainty, but if it is used in the narrower sense of khairat, it will be a good trust. ———Wakf—Validity — Wakif appointing himself mutwalli and taking remuneration—Shia law.

Per Mitter, J.—A Shia wakif can appoint himself mutwalli by the terms of the wakfnama and make it a condition that he should receive an amount of remuneration which mutwallis generally are to receive under the terms of the wakfnama. The wakf would not be void if such a condition is made. The rule which requires that the wakif qua mutwalli cannot reserve to him a salary or remuneration more than what has been fixed for mutwallis generally, means that he must not make a distinction in his favour between himself and other mutwallis following him. The fact that two classes of mutwallis were contemplated with different scales of remuneration would not make any difference.

Per Khundkar, J.—There is authority both textual and judicial to warrant the following propositions:—(1) A wakif may not reserve to himself any benefit under the wakf, that is as a beneficiary. (2) When any beneifit is given to a class of persons, and the wakif becomes adventitiously a member of that class, he may partake of the benefit. (3) He may appoint himself mutwalli and reserve to himself a remuneration as mutwalli provided that is the remuneration reserved for mutwallis generally, and such as could reasonably be reserved for them. (4) He may not make a settlement for life upon himself under the guise of mutwalli's remuneration. (5) Gross disproportion between the remuneration reserved by the wakif for himself as mutwalli and the remuneration provided for subsequent mutwallis would ordinarily be evidence of an intention to participation as a beneficiary under the wakf. MAHOMEDAN LAW—Wakf.

Where a trust amounted to a virtual transfer of the entire estate of the settlor under pressure of a serious litigation relating to the entire estate, and the objects were such for which the settlor had not shown in his life any previous or subsequent leanings, and from its inception, nothing worth mentioning was spent for the purpose of the trust or in carrying out the objects of the trust and the operation of the trust had remained a dead letter, it was held that the settlor never intended to found the charity embodied in the deed of 'wakf', and that the deed and the ostensible acting on it were all sham and illusory proceedings and consequently the wakf was void in law. The question whether a wakf was meant to be operative or not can be raised not necessarily in a suit by the creditors of the wakif. In a suit by the legal representatives of the wakif or those claiming in his right, facts can be examined for the purpose of finding whether the deed of wakf (even when followed by delivery of possession by the wakif to the mutwalli) had been executed without the wakif having any intention of divesting himself of his ownership and that his real intention was to utilise the document, should occasion arise, as a shield against claims against him which may ultimately affect his worldly possessions. If the facts establish that such was his intention the wakf will have to be declared invalid. (Mitter and Khundkar, JJ.) MAHOMED HASHIM ALI KHAN v. IFFAT ARA HAMIDI BEGUM. 74 C.L.J. 261.

Where the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad was employed and lived elsewhere, and the mother of the karnavan who lived in the family house, plucked the fruits from the trees on the parambas and paid the purapad due to the jenmi, executed a mortgage of the tarwad property.

Held, that the mortgage was not binding on the tarwad, as the mere fact that the mother performed minor acts of management during the absence of her son would not constitute her the karnavastri of the tarwad entitled to alienate the property of the tarwad; so long as there was a karnavan capable of acting who has not renounced, either directly or by implication, he alone could bind the tarwad, and the mother was not justified in acting without him. S. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act applies to Mahomedans and would govern a policy effected by a Mahomedan male on his own life for the benefit of his children. A trust is therefore created in favour of the person or persons for whose benefit the policy is effected though the interest taken by them is contingent. Such interest may be transferred and may also be released by the beneficiaries as it is not in the nature of a mere right to sue. The effect of such a release is to revoke the trust. ———Dismissal—When wrongful—"Misconduct"—What amounts to—Suit for damages—Question for determination of Court.

If a servant's conduct is incompatible with his duty, it would amount to misconduct justifying his dismissal by the master. Under the Indian law of master and servant, damages for termination of employment before expiry of the agreed term cannot be recovered as a matter of course. It is only where such termination is without sufficient cause that damages can be recovered. The circumstances of each case must determine the question whether there is sufficient cause. It would depend largely on the nature of the service to which the employment relates, the prescribed qualifications which existed when the contract of service was entered into, the altered conditions which might since come into existence, and their probable effect on the interests of the employer. No hard and fast rule can be laid down for any class of cases. Misconduct inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal. If the servant or employee does any act which is likely to discredit his master in the eyes of the public or which shows utter disregard of rules or a spirit of obstructiveness, his dismissal by the master cannot be said to be wrongful so as to entitle the servant to any damages. What the Judge has to determine is whether there was justification for the dismissal which has given rise to an action for damages, and not whether he personally would have dismissed for such conduct. The power or authority of a local body over its servants and employees is just like that of any other master and servant, except of course where special powers are conferred by statute. An ordinary master has no power to suspend a servant. He can either dismiss him or continue him in service on fresh terms. In either case the servant is entitled to be paid up to the date of dismissal in the one case or of continuance in service in the other. Where a master has no power of suspension, then he can only justify a refusal to pay the wages during the period of suspension on the ground that he had a right to dismiss the servant because of some wrongful action justifying dismissal or that instead of exercising the right, he came to a fresh agreement with the servant under which the servant rather than be dismissed agreed to forego his salary during that period and to continue to serve on fresh terms. But the master has to prove all these. ———Rights of servant—Pension—Plaintiff employed on basis of special contract—No provision therein for grant of pension—Rules allowing pension to employees subsequently framed—If entitle plaintiff to pension—Pension granted as matter of grace—If can be withdrawn.

Where the plaintiff had been employed on the basis of a special contract which did not contain any provision for the grant of a pension to him on his retirement, the mere fact that rules were subsequently framed by the employer for the grant of pension to the employees does not entitle the plaintiff to pension on the basis of these rules unless there is any indication in the contract itself that the rules are to be considered as incorporated in the contract. If the employer grants a pension to him as a matter of grace, he is competent to withdraw it subsequently. Although past services may form a good consideration for the grant of pension, there can be no question of compensating the plaintiff for past services when such services had been remunerated by the grant of salary and commission to him. ———Decree against proper guardian ad litem—Presumption as to propriety of decree—Minor's remedy — Improper representation and negligence of guardian—Difference between.

Where there is a properly appointed guardian ad litem and a decree has been passed by a duly constituted Court it must be presumed that there was justification for it and the presumption can only be rebutted in a suit brought with that object. The existence of a flaw in the appointment of a guardian, resulting in the minor not being properly represented, is one thing; the negligence of a properly appointed guardian is quite another. Though a minor on attaining majority has a right to sue to set aside a decree obtained against him on the ground of his guardian's negligence, it is not open to him to assume such negligence and to treat the decree as void on that ground. After a mortgage-debt has become due, the mortgagor cannot be held entitled to file a suit for an injunction to restrain the mortgagee from exercising the power of sale, without offering to redeem the mortgage and tendering the amount. The relief by way of injunction is always discretionary, and the Court will be slow to grant such relief to a party who admits having committed a breach of contract and at the same time wants to prevent the opposite party from enforcing his rights under the contract. Where the contract of mortgage provides that in the event of the power of sale being exercised improperly or irregularly or unnecessarily, the remedy of the mortgagor, aggrieved party, is to be only in damages, the Court will be most reluctant to give an injunction to the mortgagor. In order that the mortgage moneys may become payable to the mortgagee on the exercise of the mortgagee's option given to him under a clause in the mortgage deed, so as to entitle him to exercise his power of sale there must be an act indicating to the mortgagor the exercise of that option so as to enable the mortgagor to realise his position and save his equity of redemption. An advertisement of the property for sale by public auction, by the mortgagee, without any intimation being given to the mortgagee cannot amount to such an appropriate act by the mortgagee as will make the mortgage amount immediately payable at his option. The mere fact that the mortgagee becomes entitled to call in the mortgage moneys immediately, is not an exercise of the option given to him under the mortgage deed. The money can only become due and payable as soon as the option is exercised upon an intimation on which the mortgagor can come to know his position. A prior mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage without impleading the puisne mortgagee in the suit. In execution of that decree, the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by a third party. The purchaser thereafter paid up the dues of another prior mortgagee who had also obtained a decree in a suit to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party. The purchaser took possession through Court and the puisne mortgagee filed a suit to enforce his mortgage against him.

Held, (i) that a decree could be properly passed making the redemption by the puisne mortgagee of the two prior mortgages a condition precedent to his getting a decree on his mortgage, if at the date of his suit those two mortgages were not barred by time; (ii) that the purchaser was not accountable to the plaintiff puisne mortgagee for the profits he had received since he went into possession till the time for redemption fixed in the suit. The purchaser in his character as the purchaser of the prior mortgagee's rights had no legal right to collect the rents and profits as the prior mortgage was a simple mortgage, but as the purchaser of the right of the mortgagor he had the lawful right to do so. Held, (i) that the suit for possession was not maintainable. The plaintiff qua mortgagee could not sue for possession, for his mortgage being a simple mortgage did not give him the right to possession. He could only maintain such a suit in his character as purchaser of the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. ———Right and remedy of purchaser—Sale in execution of mortgage decree—Person interested in equity of redemption not impleaded in mortgage suit.

In cases where a person interested in the equity of redemption is not impleaded in the mortgage suit, the question whether the remedy of the purchaser in execution of the mortgage decree is a suit against him for possession or for enforcement of the security itself would depend upon the fact as to whether the mortgagor was or was not a party to the mortgage suit. If the mortgagor himself or the person in whom the mortgagor's rights were vested was impleaded as a party defendant but some person interested in the equity of redemption, as for example, a puisne mortgagee, was left out, then the purchaser acquires not only the rights of the mortgagee plaintiff but the interest of the mortgagor as well, and he can sue for possession as purchaser of the mortgagor's rights, subject to his first mortgagee rights being redeemed by the puisne mortgagee, and he in turn being allowed to redeem the latter in his capacity as a mortgagor. But when the equity of redemption is entirely unrepresented in the mortgage suit and the holder of the equity of redemption is not at all made a party to such suit, the position of the purchaser cannot be higher than that of the assignee of the mortgagee's rights. As a purchaser of the mortgagee's rights he cannot sue for possession and his only remedy would be to institute a suit for enforcement of the mortgage bond. what was undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. The mortgagee, however, can neither compel a partition, nor claim to be a party to the partition proceedings as of right. After a partition between the mortgagor and his co-sharers, his security will be upon the divided share or separate allotment of his mortgagor. In other words, he can have no recourse against the parcels allotted to the other co-sharers with whom he has no privity of contract, but must pursue his remedy only against the properties that may be allotted to the mortgagor. In order, however, that the mortgagee may be so bound, it is a fundamental condition that the partition must be a fair and proper one. Merely because the original security was in respect of an undivided share, it does not follow that the mortgagee should be held bound by a partition to which he was not a party, even where it is shown that such share had not received a proper allotment and the partition was the result of a collusive or fraudulent arrangement between the mortgagor and his co-sharers to the prejudice of the mortgagee. If a mortgagor gives his property as security for the payment of debt without surrendering possession, the implication is that he intends that the mortgagee should have power to enforce the sale of whatever interest he has which can be brought to sale by the Courts. Act is not in force and where by virtue of a local enactment, viz., S. 60, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the Civil Courts are debarred from enforcing a simple mortgage by bringing the property to sale when the property belongs to a member of an agricultural tribe, the interest transferred in such a case would be a right to have the property leased out for twenty years for the purpose of paying off the debt. Cases, however, may occur where admissions are available to the plaintiff, admissions made in the course of pleadings or outside pleadings which go to prove his claim. In such cases he can rest on admissions alone and he need not produce and prove the original document or its copy. But the admissions must be sufficient to cover the entire claim and must relieve the plaintiff of the necessity of relying on the document or on any portion of it. Where a person whose licence for driving a bar has expired, does not apply for a renewal of his licence until some days afterwards, he must be held to be guilty of the offence of contravening S. 3 (1) of the Motor Vehicles Act, if he drives the car after the expiry and before the renewal of his licence. She was compelled to do without the society of her husband and could not marry any other person. She was forced to the degrading position of having to live with and be a burden upon her parents.

Held, that it was reasonable in the circumstances to say that the husband was making her life miserable by cruelty of conduct within the meaning of S. 2 (viii) (a). A wife sued for a declaration that her marriage with her husband had come to an end on account of her conversion to Christian faith. The suit was decided before Act VIII of 1939 came into force. During the pendency of the appeal Act VIII of 1939 came into force;

Held, that the right claimed by the wife had not vested in her under any statute and consequently she could not insist that that right was indefeasible. The law applicable was as contained in S. 4 of Act VIII of 1939 by which no marriage was dissolved merely on account of change of faith. The words "the renunciation . . . . shall not by itself operate to dissolve the marriage," are incapable of the interpretation "never has had the effect of dissolving the marriage." Indeed, the words of the statute are capable of only one meaning, namely, in future the renunciation will not dissolve a marriage. The enacting words being unambiguous, there is no occasion to resort to the preamble for aid in construing the statute. The Act is therefore not retrospective. ——S. 2 (e)—Wakf—Dedication—What constitutes—If to be by beneficial owner—Dedication by trustee—Validity.

"Wakf" as defined by S. 2 (e) of the Mussalman Wakf Act means the permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for any purpose recognised by the Mahomedan Law as religious, pious or charitable. The purpose of benefiting a Madressa is a purpose recognised as charitable by the Mahomedan Law. It is not however necessary that the dedication should be by a beneficial owner. There may be a dedication by a trustee as well, though of course he must keep within the terms of the trust. Where certain persons collect monies for the purpose of building a Madressa and then build the same, and the trustees purchase immovable property out of the funds of the Madressa and execute a declaration of trust admitting the purchase for the support of the Madressa and declaring that they hold the property upon trust, in substance for the Madressa, there is a good dedication for the purpose of a wakf. It is not correct to hold that the District Court is the Court which can impose the fine provided in S. 10 of the Mussalman Wakf Act. S. 10 of the Act creates an offence and says in so many words that the omission described in the section is an offence. Since there is no Court mentioned in the Act as the Court which shall try offences under S. 10, it follows that the Court which can try those offences is the ordinary Criminal Court, i.e., the Court indicated in the Cr. P. Code, which can try such offences, in view of S. 29 (2), Cr. P. Code. It would be contrary to all principle that the Court of the District Judge should have power to punish offences under S. 10, for in such case the Court of the District Judge would be virtually in the position of prosecutor and Judge at the same time.

—— S. 3, Proviso—Effect of—Ultimate gift to "proper acts of charity"—Validity of wakf.

Per Mitter, J.—The proviso to S. 3 of Act VI of 1913 does not effect any change in the Muslim conception but simply states what the Muslim law is. The effect of that proviso must, therefore, be judged by the principles propounded by Muslim jurists. According to them there are two distinct principles: One is analogous to the cypres doctrine. The other principle is that a wakf will not fail for mere vagueness or uncertainty of the object. For when the object is not specified by the wakif, the usufruct is to be applied to the benefit of the poor. The proviso to S 3 of the Act states that the ultimate benefit in a wakf-al-aulad can also be impliedly reserved for the poor or for any purpose recognised by the Mussalman Law as religious, pious, or charitable purposes of a permanent character. Those purposes need not be expressed in clear terms in the wakfnama.

MUSSAL. WAKF VAL. ACT (1913), S. 3.

If in the wakfnama the wakif designs the ultimate gift to "proper acts of charity", these words used in the wakfnama will imply a gift to the poor, which is an effective gift, and the wakf will comply with the provisions of the Act. Further, if the wakf deed manifests an overriding intention to give to charity in the contingency of the failure of the descendants of the wakif, that would call in the application of the cypres doctrine.

Per Khundkar, J.—If the objects of the wakf are indicated with reasonable certainty, it is not necessary that they should be named. A gift for "Kar-i khair" (works of charity) in a deed of wakf cannot be condemned as vague and indeterminate, as the objects of the donor's bounty are possible of ascertainment by reference to the principles of Mahomedan Law. Even if the expression "Kar-i-khair" does not indicate the objects of bounty intended by the wakif with sufficient certainty, the doctrine of cypres could be invoked. ——S. 3, Proviso—Applicability—Construction of deed.

Where among other things a deed of waqf recited that 'if, may god forbid, there be extinction of my descendants, at any time. the amounts allotted above to my heirs, shall be utilised for some charitable purposes according to the scheme to be prepared by Court and the Court shall, in that case, have power to utilise the money only for such kare khair as would be correct and valid according to entire Mahomedan religion. It was held that the words kare khair were used in a larger sense so that money may be devoted not only to objects of khairat but for objects which might or might nol be charitable and that the settlor deliberately used a wider language to give a greater discretion to the Court and to the mutwalli to administer the trust. It was held further that the condition laid down in the proviso to S. 3 of the Mussalman Waqf Validating Act had not been duly complied with and the waqf failed for uncerainty. (*Baipai and Das. The revenue officer must serve notice of the proceedings on the recorded owner if the entries in the revenue papers are proposed to be altered to his disadvantage. (Mitchel, F.C.) RUR SINGH v. SURAIN SINGH. 20 Lah.L.T. 146.

——Alteration—Permissibility.

A mutation entry when it has been incorporated in a Jamabandi should not be altered except on the basis of an obvious clerical error or patent fact. It cannot be altered on the ground that it was made by the fraud of a party in collusion with the subordinate revenue staff. (Alan Mitchel, F.C.) AZIZ ULLAH v. GHULAMAN. 20 Lah L.T. 54.

MUTATION.

Revenue officers in mutation proceedings have a responsibility to ensure that so far as possible the revenue records are correctly maintained, and especially in the case of colony tenancies governed by statements of conditions and executive orders of Government, it is the duty of revenue officers to examine carefully all Government records that may be available at whatever stage the attention of such revenue officers is directed to the existence of such records. Therefore, the Commissioner hearing an appeal from an order of the Collector should not refuse to allow the parties to place on record material not before the Collector to establish the nature of the tenancy to which succession is being decided. (Mitchell, F.C.) ALAM KHATUN v. MEHR WALI MAHOMED. 20 Lah.L.T. 130.

——Duty of Revenue officer—Judgments of Civil Court.

There is an obligation laid on all Revenue Officers to brirg the revenue records into conformity with fact and in particular to incorporate therein any final judgments of Civil Courts. Therefore, when it is brought to the notice of a Revenue Officer that there is in existence a judgment of the High Court on which one of the parties bases his title, he should insist on the production before him of a copy of the judgment in question in order to enable him to satisfy himself that the order passed is in accordance with the order of the High Court. ——Duty of Revenue Officer—Mistake in document—If can be rectified.

It is the duty of the officers in mutation proceedings to give effect to the document as made and registered. ——Effect on title.

In mutation proceedings revenue officers are required to reach a decision, in so far as they are able to do so in summary proceedings, as to the disputed title to the land in question. The decision on a mutation is not a final adjudication on a question of title, it is the formal recording of what the revenue officers dealing with the case consider the facts in regard to title to be, and the final adjudication on a question of title between parties is a matter for the Civil Courts, except in so far as the legislature may by special statute take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in regard to certain matters and confer that jurisdiction on another authority. MYSORE CIVIL COURTS ACT (I OF 1883), S. 17-A—Applicability—Appeals before High Court.

S. 17 A is not inapplicable to appeals disposed of by the High Court. The word "appeal" in S. 17-A refers to appeals before the High Court also. (Singaravelu Mudaliar and Venkataranga Iyengar, JJ.) SRI RANGACHAR v. SRIRANGACHAR. 19 Mys.L.J 216= 45 Mys.H C.R. 477.

——S. 17-A—Construction—Appeal—When can be said to be disposed of "without contest"—Settlement between parties after hearing in part—Right to refund of Court fee.

Contest in an appeal begins at the time when, after being posted for hearing, the appellant's advocate begins his arguments. Till that stage the appeal is merely in the stage of a contentious appeal and not a contested appeal. The moment the arguments commence, the contest begins, after which even if the parties report compromise or settlement, they are not entitled to a refund of the institution fee, (Singaravelu Mudaliar and Venkataranga Iyengar, JJ.) SRI RANGACHAR v. SRIRANGACHAR. 19 Mys.L J. 216= 45 Mys H C R 477.

The question whether one or other of two rival mutts is the main mutt is a question affecting the status or legal character of the mutts, although no mutt has an absolute or exclusive right to a particular name, such as "vyasaraya mutt" to the extent of entitling that mutt to prevent the assumption of that name by another mutt. A suit for a declaration in regard to such status or legal character would lie in the Civil Court, and is not barred under S. 9, C. P. Code. ——S. 11—Connected suits—Common judgment based on findings recorded in one—Separate decrees—Appeal against one only—Maintainability.

MYS. C. P. CODE (191), S. 11.

There is no warrant or authority for the theory that a decree which has not been reversed or modified in appeal, review or revision, or set aside in appropriate proceedings on the ground of fraud or any other reason, or declared as not binding on one of the parties to it, can yet be superseded by the result of another suit. Where two suits are tried together, a suit for partition of certain items of properties and a suit for declaration in respect of some of those items of properties, and a common judgment is given or two judgments are pronounced one dependent on the other, it cannot be said that it is really necessary to appeal against the judgment and decree in one of the two suits only, namely the suit for declaration, and that the appellate decision in the suit which is taken in appeal will supersede the decree in the connected suit. In such a case the declaratory decree in one suit based on the findings arrived at in the other (partition suit) is superfluous. If the decree in the connected partition suit is not appealed against and becomes final, the appeal in the suit for declaration is incompetent; any decision given in that appeal would also be superfluous and would leave the decree in the other suit unaffected. (Reilly, C.J. and Subramanya Aiyar, J.) AYESHA BIBI v. MIRZA ABDULLA BAIG. 46 Mys.H.C.R. 287=19 Mys.L.J. 192.

——S. 11—Directly and substantially in issue—Matter not raised or made subject of issue—No finding given—If res judicata.

For a matter to operate as res judicata, it is not necessary that the point should be specifically put in issue and a formal finding recorded. To attract the provisions of S. 11, it is sufficient if the matter is substantially and directly in issue in the previous suit. If the decree in the previous suit necessarily involves a finding on the issue raised in the subsequent suit, that is sufficient for purposes of S. 11. But where a point was not raised in the prior suit, when there was no issue at all about it and no finding was given regarding that point, the decree in that suit cannot be taken to operate as res judicata on the point in the later suit. If there was a definite finding on a specific point raised in the prior suit, it must be said to have been directly and substantially in issue, and if it was disposed of after contest, that would operate as res judicata in a later suit. ——S.11—Directly and substantially in issue—Prior suit for declaration of title to land as owner—Dismissal—Subsequent suit for declaration of right of easements of light and air right of way and of right to discharge rain water, etc.—If barred.

In 1936, L the owner of a house and site, sued for a declaration of his title to a strip of land adjoining the site, claiming to have bought the same along with the house and site, in 1934, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with his enjoyment of that strip, which he alleged was part and parcel of the land which he purchased under the sale deed of the house and site; he also alleged that he was in possession of it, and that he had been in open and continuous enjoyment of it for 12 years adversely to the claim of any other person. The suit was dismissed on the finding that L was not the owner of the strip of land, that the defendant was the owner thereof, that L had not shown that he was in possession and that he had not also shown that he had been in possession for 12 years as alleged. Subsequently in April, 1938, L transferred the house and site to his wife N. N filed a suit in 1939 against the same defendant for a declaration that as owner of the house and site, she was entitled to several easements over the strip of land adjoining the site of the house, namely a right to light and air for her house, a right of way over it, a right to discharge rain water on it and to take sewage water and surplus water across it by a drain, and a right to use a privy in the strip; she also claimed an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with her enjoyment of any of those easements. It was pleaded that the dismissal of the prior suit by L precluded his transferee N from afterwards suing successfully to establish right of easement over the strip of land.

Held, (1) that so far as the claim to the easement of light and air was concerned, N should not be shut out and was not precluded from claiming the same in her suit by reason of the unsuccessful suit brought by her husband and assignor, L, claiming to be owner of the strip of the land; (2) that with regard to the claim of the other easements, the position was quite different; in the case of these other easements, N had to show, in order to succeed, that she and her predecessor-in-title were not only peaceably and openly enjoying the easements but had been claiming title to them as easements and as of right for the necessary period of 20 years. L having claimed in the previous suit to have been in possession and enjoyment of the strip of land by right of ownership, it was irreconcilable with the theory that he was claiming these easement rights, and therefore the suit in respect of these other easements was clearly barred. ——S. 11, Expl. IV—"Might and ought"—Meaning of—Alternative or inconsistent pleadings—Failure to raise—If operates as res judicata.

Alternative pleadings are allowed and may often be necessary. Apart from claims for alternative reliefs a plaintiff may base his claim on two or more different sets of facts or on alternative legal results from the same set of facts. A defendant likewise may resist a plaintiff's claim by denying or refusing to admit the facts alleged by the plaintiff or by denying the alleged legal consequences from those facts or by pleading in addition to the facts alleged by the plaintiff, further facts leading to different legal consequences. Or he may adopt all those lines of defence; and if he can do so, he ought to do so in order that all his defences may be before the Court. But neither a plaintiff nor a defendant is required or permitted by the Code to allege facts which he does not know or believe to be true. It cannot therefore be said that a party ought to make an allegation of fact within the meaning of Expl. IV to S. 11, C. P. Code, unless he at least believes it to be true, though it may subsequently be found to be true. In such a case omission to plead such an alternative or inconsistent allegation of fact cannot have the result of constructive res judicata under Expl. IV to S. 11, C. P. Code. An attaching decree-holder who attaches a decree obtained by his judgment debtor is a representative of the holder of the decree attached under O. 21, R. 53 (3). An assignee of a decree is likewise a representative of the decree-holder. Where an attaching decree-holder objects to the assignment of the decree attached by him, the dispute is one which falls under S. 47 (3), C. P. ——S. 92—Scope—Suit in respect of properties belonging to temple—Allegations of mismanagement by defendant—Prayer for possession of properties and for accounts—Sanction of Deputy Commissioner—Necessity—Mysore Religious and Charitable Institutions Act S. 40.

A suit brought in a representative capacity on behalf of all the villagers of a village by some of them, to vindicate or establish the right of the public in respect of a public trust, comes within the scope of S. 92, C. P. Code, and cannot be maintained without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner. The plaintiffs who were inhabitants of a village brought a suit in regard to the management of certain properties belonging to a temple, which was alleged to belong to the village; the plaintiffs alleged that about 25 years ago, the defendant was appointed manager on behalf of the inhabitants of the village to manage the affairs of the temple, that the properties were delivered to him, that he was directed to meet the expenses of the temple including the salary of the archaka out of the income of the properties and to manage the affairs of the temple property, that the defendant after some time neglected to manage properly, that he failed to meet the expenses and misappropriated the income of the properties reducing the affairs of the temple to a chaotic condition. It was further alleged that at a meeting of the villagers a resolution was passed removing the defendant from management and appointing the first plaintiff as manager, and that as the defendant failed to deliver the properties to the 1st plaintiff, the villagers resolved to file the suit. The 1st plaintiff and three other villagers filed the suit on behalf of all the villagers after obtaining permission of the Court under O. 1, R. 8, C. P. Code. The plaintiffs prayed for a declaration of the title of the temple and the village to the properties in suit, for delivery of possession of the said property, for a direction to the defendant to render an account of his management, and for mesne profits, etc. The defendant pleaded that the temples belonged to his family and that the properties were endowed by his ancestors, and that the suit was barred, having been brought without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner as required by S. 92, C. P. Code.

Held, that on the allegations in the plaint, the defendant was a trustee against whom there were allegations of breach of trust in respect of a trust created for public purposes of a religious nature, that the reliefs prayed really came under S. 92, C. P. Code, though worded differently in order to evade the application of the section, and that the suit fell under S. 92, C. P. Code. S. 92 (2), C. P, Code, therefore barred the suit as the permission of the Deputy Commissioner was not obtained.

Held, further, that S. 40 of the Mysore Religious and Charitable Institutions Act also barred the suit, as the

A purchaser from the representatives of a decree-holder a ction-purchaser is entitled to oppose an application filed under O. 9, R. 13, C. He is a person claiming under the decree-holder auction-purchaser so far as the property purchased by him is concerned, and he is also a legal representative of the decree holder auction-purchaser so far as that property is concerned. Such a purchaser who is interested in maintaining the execution sale which would be affected by the setting aside of the decree sought to be set aside under O. 9, R. 13, C. P. Code, has a right to oppose the application and is therefore entitled to be made a party respondent if he wishes to do, although he may not be entitled to notice of the application as a matter of course under O. 9, R. 14. O 21, R. 16, C. P. Code, regulates procedure and does not affect substantive rights. A person who is really entitled to a decree or the money due under a decree is clearly entitled to deal with the decree as owner and in any manner he likes after the death of the person in whose name the decree was obtained and stood. An assignee from the real owner of the decree after the death of the benami decree holder is therefore entitled to execute the decree under O. 21, R. 16, C. P. Code, whether he be regarded as the assignee under an assignment in writing by the person really entitled to the money due under the decree, or under an assignment by a person he on whom the decree devolved by operation of law after the death of the decree-holder. Under O. 21, R. 72, C. P. An execution sale is not void merely because the decree-holder has purchased the property at the sale without leave of the Court. It is only voidable under O. 21, R. 72 (3). In considering whether the sale is to be set aside or not the Court has to consider whether or not the property has been realised to the best advantage; the sale cannot be set aside under O 21, R. 90, C. P. Code, unless substantial injury is proved, even if it be held that a purchase by the decree-holder without permission under O. 21, R. 72, amounts to material irregularity within the meaning of O. 21, R. 90. ——O. 41, R. 22—Scope—Claim for two independent reliefs on same cause of action—Decree awarding one and disallowing other—Appeal by defendant—No cross-objections by plaintiff—Right to support decree awarding relief.

Under O. 41, R. 22, C. P. Code, a respondent can support the decree of the first Court on any of the grounds decided against him. Although a portion of his claim based on a particular cause of action is disallowed, that would not disentitle him from supporting the decree of the lower Court awarding him another relief on the ground that the finding of the lower Court on the point is not correct, although he has not filed a memorandum of cross-objections against the finding. Where two independent reliefs, one of which is not directly connected with the other, arise out of the same cause of action, it is open to a respondent to give up one of the reliefs and support the decree of the lower Court awarding him the other relief on the ground that the finding of the lower Court is erroneous, although he cannot get a decree for that relief in the appellate Court without filing cross objections in that behalf. The test to be applied is whether, if the ground urged by the respondent without a memorandum of cross-objections is up held, it would necessarily destroy the decree of the lower Court. The object of O 41, R. 33, C. P. MYSORE COMPANIES ACT (as amended in 1938), S. 271 (3)—Foreign company carrying on business in Mysore—Liquidation in foreign state and appointment of Official Liquidator—Suit filed by company in Mysore prior to liquidation—Right to continue—Liquidator appointed by foreign state—Competency of.

A foreign company carrying on business in Mysore State and having a registered office in the State, can, if it ceases to carry on business in Mysore, be wound up as an unregistered company under S. 271 (3) of the Mysore Companies Act. Ordinarily the Official Liquidator appointed by a Court in Mysore in such winding up would have power to institute or continue and conduct suits in the Mysore State Courts on behalf of such company. The Official Liquidator appointed for the company by a foreign Court has no right to proceed with a suit which has been filed by the company in the Mysore State. It is not therefore competent for an Official Liquidator appointed by the foreign Court to apply to the Mysore Court under O. 1, R. 10, C. P. Code, to permit him to continue a suit filed by the foreign company carrying on business in Mysore State prior to its winding up in the foreign state. MYSORE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (II OF 1904), S. 103—Search list or mahazar—If to be exhibited in criminal trial—Evidence given of contents of search list and judgment discussing contents without search list being exhibited—Propriety.

Where a search list or mahazar prepared according to the provisions of S. 103, Cr. P Code, is not exhibited in a case and is not part of the record of the case, it is entirely irregular and improper for the Court to allow witnesses to give evidence about its contents or to discuss the contents thereof in its judgment in the case. To do so is to permit evidence of the contents of an existing and accessible document to produce which no attempt is made. Such a procedure is not only mistaken but also absurd and improper. There is no warrant for the view that mahazars are never to be exhibited in a criminal trial. Mahazars on the other hand may, and often should, be exhibited. It can be used not only for the purpose of refreshing the memory of a witness or as a substitute for his memory, but also to corroborate the evidence of the writer or any signatory to it or to contradict the witnesses concerned. Mahazars, apart from being used to corroborate or contradict a witness in the case, should be exhibited to show that the due formalities required by law in regard to the search have been fulfilled, and the Court should insist upon the search list made in regard to the search being exhibited in the case. ——S. 255-A—Scope—Duty of Magistrate—Postponing judgment and conviction until after proof of previous conviction—Legality of procedure.

Under S. 255-A, Cr. P. Code, it is the duty of a Magistrate, in a case where the accused is charged with previous convictions under S. 75, I. P. Code, to write a judgment finding the accused guilty and convicting him of the main offence, as soon as the evidence in respect of that offence is closed and arguments heard, and should only postpone passing sentence until after evidence is recorded in respect of the charge under S. 75, I. P. Code. A Magistrate who merely finds the accused guilty of the main offence after evidence and arguments deferring the judgments, and adjourns the case for proof of the previous convictions and then after such proof only delivers judgment convicting the accused of the main offence and sentencing him, acts in contravention of the provisions of S. 255-A, Cr. P. Code. Such a procedure is highly irregular and is not justified by any provision in the Code. (Venkataranga Iyengar, J.) ABDUL MAJID, In re. 19 Mys. L J. 78.

——Ss. 348 and 349—Applicability and construction—Second class Magistrate finding accused guilty—Accused previously convicted and deserving sentence beyond Magistrate's powers—Proper procedure — If bound to commit to Court of Session.

Where a second class Magistrate after hearing the evidence in a case is of opinion that the accused is guilty, but that because the accused had been previously convicted, he cannot impose on him a sufficiently heavy sentence, he can, if he is convinced that a sufficient sentence can be imposed by the District Magistrate, submit his proceedings to the District Magistrate under S. 349, Cr. P. Code, it is not obligatory on him to commit the accused to the Court of Session under S. 348, Cr. P. Code. When the Magistrate thinks that the accused would be amply punished by the District Magistrate, it cannot be said that he is satisfied within the meaning of S. 348, Cr. P. Code that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the Court of Session. In such a case, it is reasonable and proper and in accordance with public interest that a second class Magistrate should submit the proceedings to the District Magistrate; it is unnecessary for him to proceed under S. 348 and to worry the Court of Session with the case at all and to waste the time of that Court. ——S. 387—Scope—Mandatory nature of—Warrant of attachment—Execution beyond local limits—Absence of endorsement by District Magistrate—Effect—Illegality—If curable by S. 538.

S. 387, Cr P. Code, restricts the authority of the warrant of attachment of a Magistrate to the local limits of his jurisdiction. A warrant of attachment issued by a Magistrate has no authority for execution at a place beyond the local limits of his jurisdiction. It can be executed outside, such limits only if there is an endorsement by the District Magistrate. The authority to attach outside the local limits is derived from the endorsement of the District Magistrate. The provision that the warrant should be endorsed by the District Magistrate if it has to be executed in an area outside the local limits of the Magistrate issuing the warrant is an obligatory or mandatory provision and hence an attachment effected on the basis of a warrant not so endorsed is an attachment without authority and illegal. The omission to endorse is not a mere defect or want of form and therefore S. 538 of the Code would not apply as to cure such a material irregularity or illegality. S. 538, Cr. P. Code, only applies to mere errors of procedure arising out of mere inadvertence and does not apply to cases of disregard of a mandatory and imperative provision of the Code, such as is contained in S. 387 (Subramania Aiyar, J.) GOVERNMENT OF MYSORE v. KARI GOWDA. 19 Mys. MYSORE DISTRICT BOARDS ACT (III OF 1926), S. 36—Scope—Contract not in accordance with statute—Enforceability—Suit by Board—Maintainability—Plea of want of mutuality—Sustainability—Executed and executory contracts—Distinction.

In a suit brought by a District Board on a contract that is not executed in accordance with S. 36 (2) of the Mysore District Boards Act, it is not open to the defendant to urge that the suit based on such a contract is not maintainable, when the contract has been executed. If it is found that the defendant has received the benefit of all the stipulations for which he contracted or if the District Board has performed all the obligations on its part, and thus the full consideration has been executed by the Board, a defence based upon want of mutuality is untenable, and the contract may be enforced against the defendant by the Board. If, on the other hand, at the time the Board wants to enforce the contract against the defendant it is found that the contract is still executory, a defence based upon want of mutuality is a good defence, and the suit by the Board must fail on that ground. An application under S. 339, Cr.P. Code, for sanction to prosecute a person for perjury under S. 193, I. P. The whole of S. 8 (1) (a) of the Hindu Women's Rights Act refers to what is to happen at a partition and the words "who have left no male issue" must be interpreted as applying to the time at which the partition takes place, that is, the time at which the women's right to claim a share arises. The widows of predeceased sons who come within the words of the section are not only widows of predeceased undivided sons who never had any male issue or who did not ever leave any male issue but also widows of predeceased sons of whom there is no male issue left at the time of the partition. In a partition between coparceners one of whom is the uncle of the other, the provisions of S. 8(1) (b) have to be applied to S. 8 (1) (c), and the mothers of both the uncle and the nephew must be held to be entitled to share with them. In cases of partition which come within sub S. MYSORE INAM RULES (1867), Rr. I, II, III, XX XXI and XXII—Applicability and scope—Minor inams—Omission to confirm or recognise inams granted by inamdars in settlement—Effect of—Right of minor inamdars.

The object of effecting an inam settlement is to settle the extent of the land concerned and of the extent of land revenue remitted and also the person entitled to the benefit of the inam. It is not the function of the Inam Commissioner to decide the validity or the nature of any gifts or alienations made by an inamdar, that is to say, to make any inquiry into those matters and record his decision in the inam register. Alienations of holding in the village made by an inamdar are not within the scope of the investigations which the Inam Commissioner was to be required to conduct under the rules. These rules have effect only on the inams granted by the Government and are not concerned with any grants that might have been made by the inamdars themselves. Private inams do not come within the scope of the rules. It cannot therefore be said that private inams fail because of omission to record them as inams in the inam register. The omission to confirm or recognise these private inams in the inam settlement does not affect the rights of the holders of private inams, as minor inams do not come within the mischief of the inam rules. MYSORE INCOME-TAX ACT (V OF 1923), Ss. 13 and 23 (3)—Scope—Accounts produced by assessee—If can be rejected and turnover basis adopted—Grounds for—Duty of Income-tax Officer—S. 23 (3)—If excludes proviso to S 13—Discretion of Income-tax Officer.

S. 23 (3) of the Income-tax Act does not exclude the proviso to S. 13. Under the latter section, the income, profits and gains have to be computed in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the assessee. Accounts produced by the assessee should not be rejected and the turnover basis adopted unless there are good grounds, which should be placed on record, to consider them to be unreliable and not worthy of acceptance. S. 13 relates only to the method of accounting and the books cannot be rejected merely because the method of accounting does not appeal to the Income-tax Officer. But the Income-tax Officer is not precluded from adopting any other method of assessing the taxable income when accounts are produced, though the accounts may be inaccurate or defective, and the Income-tax Officer, in spite of a sincere attempt, cannot find out the assessable income. If the accounts tendered by the assessee are found to be incorrect or incomplete, if they are "cooked" or are "fictitious," it would not be wrong to say that the method of accounting is such that it is not possible to deduce the total income of the assessee therefrom. Therefore, while making assessment under S. 23 (3) of the Act, it would be open to the Income-tax Officer to invoke the proviso to S. 13 of the Act, if, after examining the accounts produced by the assessee under S. 22 (4), or after recording the evidence led by the assessee under S. 23 (2), he still remains unconvinced as to the reliability of the assessee's accounts, and considers that they do not serve as a safe guide in calculating the assessee's taxable income. The absence of the words "assess to the best of his judgment" in S. 23 (3), does not take away the power vested in the Income-tax Officer by the terms of the proviso to S. 13. The Income tax Officer should, of course, try his best from a careful scrutiny of the accounts furnished, to arrive at the taxable income, and should not avoid the labour and time involved in the scrutiny by resorting to the proviso to S. 13. The discretion of the Income-tax Officer in this matter should not be arbitrary. ——S. 66 (3)—Question of law—Jurisdiction of High Court to interfere with conclusions of fact.

Under S. 66 (3) of the Mysore Income-tax Act, it is only a question of law that can be referred to the High Court. Whether there is evidence on which a certain finding of fact can be arrived at is, as a rule, a point of law. The High Court is entitled to see whether there are materials for the conclusions arrived at by the Income tax Officer on a question of fact. Where the case is not one of want of evidence to justify a finding or one where the conclusion can be characterised as capricious or injudicial the High Court cannot interfere. Where the Income-tax Officer finds that from the materials placed before him he cannot calculate the taxable income correctly, it is an inference of fact from a certain set of facts, and no question of law is involved which would justify the High Court in interfering. A sale of an insolvent's property in execution of a decree obtained against him before the adjudication in insolvency, cannot be held to be a nullity on the ground that the sale was held without the permission of the Insolvency Court. An execution sale held in violation of S. 16 2) of the Insolvency Act of 1911 [S. 28 (2) of the present] without the leave of the Court is not ab. initio void. Such a sale would only be voidable at the instance of the receiver on behalf of the general body of the creditors. Where, however, no creditor objects to the sale and no officer of the Court objects to such a sale, the sale is not invalid and cannot be ignored merely because the insolvent who has kept quiet all along challenges it long afterwards. The omission to obtain leave under S. 16 (2) of the Insolvency Act would not deprive the executing Court of its jurisdiction to hold the sale. In holding the sale the Court does not act without jurisdiction, but only irregularly in the exercise of its jurisdiction. The objection to the irregularity may be waived and must be assumed to be waived when not taken at the time when the exercise of jurisdiction is first claimed to the knowledge of the party affected. When the insolvent does not raise the objection of want of leave at the time the sale is applied for or held, it must be deemed to have been waived and cannot be later pressed. There is really no inherent want of jurisdiction, for the prohibition in S. 16 (2) is merely a restraint on the exercise of jurisdiction and is a matter of procedure. On the date fixed for sale of properties attached in execution of an ex parte decree the judgment-debtor applied to have the ex parte decree set aside and also applied for stay of sale. The decree-holder not objecting, the sale was stayed. Subsequently the execution application was dismissed as the sale had been stayed. The judgment debtor's application to set aside the ex parte decree was subsequently rejected and the decree-holder again applied for execution, i.e., for a revival of the previous execution case. The lower Courts, treating it as a fresh execution case, dismissed it as barred by limitation as it was made more than three years after the rejection of the application to set aside the ex parte decree.

Held, that the dismissal of the prior execution application was not a judicial determination of the proceedings but only a dismissal for statiscal purposes, and that the later application was both in form and in substance one for revival of the prior execution proceedings. The appellant obtained an ex parte mortgage decree against the mortgagor, who then applied to have it set aside under O. 9, R. 13, C. P. Code. He was called upon to furnish security as additional security, and the respondent then stood surety and executed a bond on 20—12—1929 which recited, inter alia. "I hereby bind myself to pay the decree amount with costs in the event of the case being decided against the defendant and the defendant failing to pay the same. For this I shall be personally liable besides my movable and immovable properties, etc." The ex parte decree was set aside and thereafter, on 12—6—1931, a preliminary mortgage decree was made. A final decree followed on 22—9—1932, and in execution the mortgaged property was sold and the sale was confirmed on 21—7—1933. On 1—9—1934, the appellant applied for a personal decree under O. 34, R. 6, C. P. Code, making the surety also a party to the application and prayed for a personal decree not only against the judgment-debtor but also against the respondent-surety. A personal decree against the judgment-debtor alone was made on 4—3—1935 and none was made against the surety. The appellant on 29—7—1936 applied for execution of the personal decree both against the judgment debtor and the surety (respondent). The latter pleaded limitation, as the application was more than three years after the sale, while the appellant claimed that his application for a personal decree dated 1—9—1934, was a step in-aid of execution and saved limitation against the surety also under Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act.

Held, (1) that the liability of the surety under the bond arose on the failure of the judgment-debtor to pay the decree amount, i.e., after the security was sold, and the present application filed beyond three years even from the date of confirmation of the sale was barred by limitation as against the surety; (2) that the obtaining of a personal decree against the judgment-debtor was not a condition precedent to the enforcing of the surety's liability under the bond; (3) that the application for a personal decree as against the surety was unnecessary and was one in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act and did not save limitation, it not having been a step in-aid; (4) that the respondent who became a surety for the judgment-debtor could not be regar ed as a party against whom the decree was passed jointly with the defendant in the suit within the meaning of the last clause of Expl. I to Art. 182, Limitation Act, and therefore the prior application for a personal decree did not save limitation against the surety. MYSORE MOTOR VEHICLE RULES—Right to ply motor bus—Transfer of—Agreement without previous permission of District Magistrate—Validity—Right of parties to claim relief.

An agreement entered into in violation of the Mysore Motor Vehicle Rules is void as it is opposed to public policy. A right to ply a motor bus can be transferred only with the permission of the District Magistrate; in view of the rules framed under the Mysore Motor Vehicles Act. An agreement for the transfer of such a right by a licensee without the previous permission of the District Magistrate is one which is illegal and void and therefore unenforceable. S. 48 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is not exhaustive of the modes of transfer of a negotiable instrument It only prescribes the way in which such instruments can be negotiated according to the rules of the Law Merchants It leaves untouched the ordinary law of transfer of a chose in action or an actionable claim which undoubtedly a negotiable instrument is. A transfer under the ordinary law, i.e., S. 130 of the T. P. Act, would entitle the transferee or assignee only to the right, title and interest of the transferor and not to the superior rights of a holder in due course which a transfer under the Negotiable Instruments Act alone can confer. S. 137, T. P. Act has not the effect of denying to negotiable instruments the method of transfer under S. 130, T. P. Act. S. 137 is in no way restrictive, but on the other hand it gives an extended privilege to mercantile documents. An assignee of a promissory note under the ordinary law, though not as a holder in due course, is entitled to maintain a suit on the note. A document which contains a promise to pay on a contingency will not be treated as a promissory note for the purposes of the Negotiable Instruments Act, but it may be regarded as such for the purposes of the Stamp Act. To determine whether a document is a promissory note or not the main question to be considered is not whether the instrument is negotiable or not though ordinarily negotiability of an instrument is a good test for that purpose, but to consider whether in substance and in primary intention of the parties the document was or was not a promissory note and whether it was intended to record a different kind of transaction altogether. A reference in the promissory note to a pre-existing account between the parties, made with a view to state the consideration for the note, does neither make the liability under the note a contingent one, nor the instrument any the less a promissory note. When deciding whether the maker of a promissory note has executed it as the agent or the representative of another, the Court cannot look into the surrounding circumstances. It cannot look beyond what is stated in the instrument. In India, where a person executing an instrument in an Indian language, after giving his own description, adds that he is the agent of another, it means that he is acting as the other's agent in the matter of the execution of the document, and it is sufficient to exclude his personal responsibility. The duty and authority of a Bank to pay a cheque drawn on it by its customer are determined by countermand of payment. If the Bank negligently pays the amount of the cheque thereafter, it cannot debit the customer's account with that amount. Such payment is not a payment made in due course, so as to discharge the Bank. The Bank is not prote ted by its current account rule which states that "the Bank will register instructions from the drawer regarding cheques lost, stolen, etc., but cannot guarantee constituents against loss in such cases in event of a cheque being paid." The rule is intended, to apply to events happening prior to the time when a cheque reaches the Bank and is presented for payment, not to negligence committed by the Bank after presentation. In all suits instituted after the passing of the N. W. F. P. Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act the Court must determine the rights of the parties under Mahomedan law and not according to custom. A reversioner is unknown to Mahomedan law. His right under custom is based on a spes successionis, which is also unknown to Mahomedan law. According to the Opium Act, all searches under S. 15 of the Act are to be in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is, however, no provision in the Code relating to searches of persons, except S. 102 (3) which refers to persons in or about a place liable to search. S. 103 deals only with 'places to be searched' and it has no application to searches under the Opium Act. Irregularity in the search does not necessarily invalidate the proceedings. It always affords a ground for scrutiny, and if, after careful scrutiny, the Court comes to the conclusion that an excisable article was recovered from the possession of the accused, then the conviction is treated as a sound one. ORISSA TENANCY ACT (VI OF 1913), Ss. 18 and 127—Scope and effect of—Jurisdiction of Revenue Officer—Rent fixed at rate—Terms of agreement ignored—Effect—Settlement of rent—If without jurisdiction and of no effect.

By S. 118 of the Orissa Tenancy Act the Revenue Officer is enjoined to settle fair and equitable rents for tenants of every class and, therefore, he must record rents even for the re-claimed lands, if any, whether the landlord has moved the Collector to eject the tenants under S. 61 or not. The jurisdiction to assess and determine the rent is an entirely different thing from any error committed in fixing the amount of rent, because the officer who has jurisdiction to decide a matter has jurisdiction to decide it rightly or wrongly. He may take a wrong view of the facts, may misinterpret a kabuliyat, ignore the terms of a compromise arrived at by the parties and fix a rent which he considers to be the proper rent. If the officer makes a mistake, the landlord or the raiyat who is aggrieved thereby has the remedy of a suit in a Civil Court under S. 126 to be instituted within 6 months of the date of the certificate of the final publication of the record-of-rights. If no such suit is instituted, the decision of the Revenue Officer becomes final, and by reason of S. 127, the rent settled and entered in the record-of-rights finally published shall be deemed to have been correctly settled and the landlord cannot claim rent for the lands at a rate higher than what is stated in the record-of rights finally published. It cannot be said that because the Revenue Officer in fixing the rent has ignored the terms of an agreement between the parties, his decision settling the rent is without jurisdiction and therefore can be ignored. It is doubtful whether the word 'produce' in S. 3 of the Oudh Rent Act was not intended to be restricted to vegetable produce only. In case of fishes in a tank it may be possible to say that they are the produce of that tank, assuming that no water flows in from or out to other places where they may be produced. But in the case of a river it is impossible to say that the fishes found in it have been produced in any particular area. The expression 'Land' in S. 127 of the Act cannot include the produce of the land. Hence a suit for money due in respect of fishery rights in a river cannot lie either under S. 108 (2) or S. 127 of the Act. Such a suit in the Civil Court is not barred by S 108 of the Act. There is a clear cut distinction between a transfer of occupancy rights created under S. 5 of the Rent Act and those created by a decree of Court. Under S. 5 of the Rent Act a transfer of occupancy rights has been declared to be void ab initio. In the case of a transfer created either by an agreement or by a decree of a Court a condition against alienation has always been held to be one which is inserted for the benefit of the superior proprietor, who alone has the right to question it, but, as between the transferor and transferee, it is not open to the transferor to raise the question of the invalidity of the transfer. It is open to the landlord to refuse to recognise the transfer and treat the transferee as a trespasser and eject him but the transferor is bound by the transfer and is consequently estopped from maintaining a suit against the transferee treating him as a trespasser liable to ejectment under S. 127 of the Rent Act. S. 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act only refers to a suit of a certain description being decided only under the Oudh Rent Act in a Revenue Court. It does not mean that if there is any remedy other than by a suit it cannot be adopted. There is a clear distinction between S. 108 (10) and O. 21, R. 100, C. P. Code The former prescribes a remedy when action has been taken by a landlord to eject a tenant. To justify this remedy there must have been a direct and intentional conflict of interest between the landlord and the tenant. For the purpose of R. 100 of O. 21, C. P. Code, the action taken by the landlord must have been against a third person. Hence where a third party has been dispossessed in execution of an ejectment decree, S. 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent. Act does not bar an application under R. 100 of O. 21, C. P. Code, by the aggrieved party. (Harper, S. M.) SYED MAHOHED RAM v. ABHILAKH

Where a decree obtained against several defendants exceeds Rs. 500 but the decree-holder in his application for execution apportions the liability of each of the judgment-debtors and specifies the amount for which each of them is liable and none of them are liable for more than Rs. 500, it cannot lead to the inference that there were several decrees and each of them was for a sum less than Rs. 500. The restriction contained in S. 151 of the Oudh Rent Act forbidding the issue of a process of execution against immovable property unless the movable property was exhausted, no longer finds a place in the new Act. It must be held, therefore, that where a decree has not been satisfied in full at the commencement of the new Tenancy Act, the execution of that decree must now be governed by the provisions of the new Tenancy Act which are contained in S. 243 of that Act, namely, that the procedure provided by O.21, C. It is for the decree-holder to show in the first instance under S 151 of the Oudh Rent Act, that satisfaction of the decree cannot be obtained against the movable property, but very title evidence, like the filing of an affidavit would be enough to shift the onus on to the judgment-debtor. A judgment-debtor should not be allowed to escape liability by putting forward for the first time after 3 years after the decree an objection under S. 151 of a vague nature which is not supported by any evidence. But where the superior proprietor sues the under-proprietor alone for arrears of rent without making the mortgagee a party to the suit, obtains a decree against him and in execution of that decree purchases the property put up for sale, the decretal amount is satisfied and the liability to pay rent by the mortgagee thus comes to an end. PARSI MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT (III OF 1936), S. 1 (2)—"Parsi subjects of His Majesty"—Meaning of—Change of domicile—Effect of on status and nationality.

The words "Parsi subjects of His Majesty" in S. 1 (2) of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, refers to the political status of such subjects as opposed to their civil status. The jurisdiction of the Court therefore depends upon the political status of the Parsi subject, i.e., his nationality and allegiance, and not upon his domicil. A mere change of domicile does not in any way change a Parsi's nationality or his political status. (Wadia, J.) H. M. PANTHAKY v. M. D. PANTHAKY.

——S. 29 (3)—"Resides"—Meaning of.

The term "resides" is an elastic term and the meaning to be given to it must depend upon the circumstances of the case. It is not essential for the purpose of residence that a person should have a house of his own. If a person resides permanently at a particular place, there can be no doubt that it is his or her residence. But the residence need not necessarily be permanent. It is enough if it is bona fide, with an element of continuity about it, it should not be merely casual or for a temporary or passing purpose. (Wadia, J.) H. M. PANTHAKY v. M D. In a case under S. 4 of the Partition Act, ordinarily the purchaser should be asked to deposit in Court the purchase money by a time fixed by the Court, the time to be fixed and extended at the discretion of the Court. If the purchaser deposits the said purchase money within the time allowed by the Court a decree should be passed in the suit in favour of the purchaser declaring that all rights of the plaintiff or persons claiming partition in the property in suit have been transferred by a Court sale in favour of the defendant on payment of the said sale price and plaintiff's claim for partition is dismissed. If necessary a sale certificate may also be issued to the purchaser. PARTNERSHIP ACT (IX OF 1932). Ss. 2 (b), 4 and 69 — Solitary transaction of money-lending by two persons jointly — If make them partners — Necessity for their registration.

S. 2, Cl (b) read with S. 4 is intended to mean a continued participation of two or more persons in a trade, occupation or profession with the intention of sharing profit accruing from it. An adventure or an undertaking mentioned in S 8 of the Act presumes the existence of a partnership as defined in S. 4 and therefore a fortiori the existence of a business mentioned in S. 2, Cl. (b). A solitary transaction in which two persons have jointly lent money to another would not make those persons partners in a firm and hence their registration is not necessary under S. 69 of the Act. (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, J.) KARAM DIN v. ANANT RAM. 193 I.C. 51 = 13 R. Pesh. 49 = A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 6.

A combination of ginning businessmen having for its object the prevention of the cutting of rates for ginning cotton and having nothing to do with the conducting of the respective businesses which enter into the combination is not a partnership though each member has to make a contribution to the common pool and get a share out of the general fund. It is simply a case of a combination of various businesses inter se to keep up prices and as a consequence to benefit the members. Hence a suit by such a combination which is not registered, against a member for his dues is not affected by S. 69, Partnership Act. Such a combination clearly falls within the definition of 'Trade Union' under Trade Unions Act. S. 13 has no application to such a suit as mentioned above. What S. 13 says is that if a trade union is registered it can sue and be sued and nothing more. Where the suit is by one member against another not in a representative capacity but as a contracting party to the combination it is maintainable. (*Stone, C. ——S. 69 (1) and Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 55—Obligation to register, if implied in a partnership agreement—Suit to enforce such obligation—Maintainability—Proper remedy.

The Partnership Act does nowhere enjoin registration. It is optional and not obligatory. There is no implied obligation on the partners to concur in effecting registration, in a contract of partnership. Even if there is such an obligation, then the obligation would arise out of the partnership agreement (i.e.) out of a contract, and the right, flowing from the obligation, of a partner to compel his co-partners to effect registration would be a "right arising from a contract", and a suit to enforce such a right brought by one partner against the other partners of an unregistered firm is expressly barred by the provisions of S. 69 (1) of the Partnership Act. In such a case the proper and indeed the only available remedy is a suit for dissolution and not a suit for a mandatory injunction. A certificate of registration, issued by the controller under S 45 (1) of the Patents and Designs Act to the proprietor of a design when registered, is not final and conclusive. There is only a prima facie presumption that the person whose name is registered as the proprietor is the proprietor of a new or original design, but the presumption can be rebutted. The certificate is not conclusive, and there is nothing in the Act which prevents the defendant in a suit for damages for infringement of a registered design under S. 53 of the Act from raising in defence the plea that the design was previously published and was neither new nor original. The onus is of course on the defendant who seeks to go behind the certificate of registration to show that the plaintiff is not the proprietor of the registered design in question. The reduction of an employee to a lower grade of pay from a higher grade for a short period is a "deduction" within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act. If an employer terminates his existing contract with his employee, but offers to re-employ him on a lower rate, there is nothing against it in the Act, and no question of deduction would arise. S. 70 of the Penal Code is not controlled by the provisions of S. 386 (1) (b) and (3) of the Cr. P. Code. S. 70, I. P. Code, is substantive law as to the payment of fine while S. 386, Cr. P. Code, relates to the procedure for its recovery; and the section deals only with procedure of levying the fine imposed under the substantive law of crimes. It is a general rule relating to the construction of statutes that in the absence of an express provision, an adjective law cannot control the provisions of substantive law The warrant issued under S 386 (1) (b) Cr. P Code, has to be deemed to be a decree under S. 386 (3) for certain purposes only and not for all purposes. For the purpose of limitation, therefore, the substantive law contained in S. 70, I. P. Code, is not affected. S. 48, C. P. Code, does not therefore apply to a warrant under S. 386 (1) (b) executed according to the C. P. Code and the twelve years rule is not applicable to such a case. The six years rule provided for S. 70, I. P. Code is the rule to be applied. A darkhast presented after the period of six years from the date of the sentence of fine is therefore time barred under S 70, I. P. Code. S. 114, Penal Code, does not give a Judge or Magistrate any authority for imposing any punishment. That is not a section authorising punishment in any way. It merely provides that the person who comes within its provisions must be treated as if he had committed the act or offence concerned, i.e., if it is an offence which is concerned, he must be treated for the purpose both of conviction and of punishment as if he had committed that offence. The authority for imposing the punishment is to be found in the section which provides punishment for the offence. What the abettor whose abetment is followed by his presence at the commission of the offence within the meaning of S. 114 of the Penal Code will be convicted of will be that offence itself. When a person pleading guilty to five previous convictions under S. 379 of the Penal Code, an offence punishable under Ch. XVI of the Code is again convicted of an offence under S. 379 read with S. 114 of the Penal Code, he clearly comes within the provisions of S. 75 of the Penal Code and S. 565 of the Cr. P. Code and both S. 75 of the Penal Code and S. 565 of the Cr. P. Code can be applied to such a person. ——S. 75—Applicability—Summary trials—Procedure.

While the circumstances of a case where S. 75, Penal Code, can be applied, make it desirable that the offence should not be tried in a summary way, and that, in such cases, if the trial has started in a summary way, the provisions of S. 260 (2), Cr. P. Code, should be followed nevertheless a trial in which a charge under S. 75, Penal Code, could be framed is not necessarily bad in law because the offence is tried summarily, although it may almost always be inexpedient in the interests of justice to do so; but S. 75, Penal Code, is an enabling provision and merely applies a principle, and since it does not create a separate offence or an offence at all the questions whether S. 260, Cr.P. Code, applies to offences under S. 75, Penal Code, does not arise. But a trial in a summary way is not an appropriate procedure when S. 75, Penal Code, is to be applied. Nor indeed, would it be appropriate when S. 75 Penal Code, is not to be applied, but previous convictions are to be taken into account in determining what punishment within his ordinary powers a Magistrate should impose because of the limited nature of the sentence which may be passed under S. 262, Cr. P. Code. Previous convictions however can be taken into account under S. 14, Evidence Act, even when S. 75, Penal Code, is not to be applied. After an accused has been convicted and before sentence is passed, a Court can for the purpose of deciding what sentence should be passed, take into consideration previous convictions, any question of S. 75, Penal Code, apart. ——S. 75—Committal on charge under—Principles and procedure—Proof of previous convictions—Conviction slip—Sufficiency for conviction.

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 75.

The principles which govern the committal of accused persons to the Court of Session on other charges should also apply to the committal on charges under S. 75, I. P. Code. A prima facie case should be made out before an accused person can be committed to the Court of Session on a charge under S 75, I. P. Code; there should be evidence on which, if unrebutted, he could be convicted. He cannot properly be convicted on a mere conviction slip or a mere record of his previous crimes kept by the authorities, on a mere history sheet, as it may be called. Such a conviction slip greatly facilitates proof, but is not proof itself of previous convictions, nor can an accused be convicted on this without proof. (*Davis, C. ——S. 75—"Previous conviction"—Meaning of.

S. 75 applies in cases of convictions prior to the conviction of the offence for the enhanced punishment of which S. 75 is to be invoked. But it does not provide for enhanced punishment in the case of convictions subsequent to the offence. The theft for which the accused was committed to the Court of Session was committed on 28th October, 1938. The accused had convictions subsequent to the commission of this offence, the dates of these convictions being 26th June, 1939 and 20th July, 1939.

Held, that the previous convictions being subsequent to the commission of the offence for which the accused was committed could not be deemed previous convictions within the meaning of S 75. The accused was in fact committed for an offence which when committed was not a subsequent offence within the meaning of S. 75 and therefore the committal must be quashed. —— S. 86—Intention of drunken man—How to be determined.

Drunkenness of an accused person at the time he committed the offence should be taken into consideration in cases in which intention on the part of the accused is necessary to constitute the offence charged. The intention which would be ascribed to a sober man in connexion with the act must not necessarily be ascribed to a drunken man. The question of intention must be determined in each individual case according to the facts proved and according to accepted general principles. The omission of an express provision in S. 86 regarding the intention to be attributed to a drunken man doing an act which is an offence when done with a particular knowledge or intent leaves it open to the Courts to deal with the question of intention according to general principles of law. Consequently a voluntary drunkard like every other person is in the first instance presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his act, but this presumption may be rebutted by his showing that at the time he did the act his mind was so affected by the drink he had taken that he was incapable of forming the intention requisite for making his act the offence charged against him. The section applies indeed to a case where an official has done wrongly what he might have done rightly but not to cases where the act could not have been done rightly at all by the official concerned. Hence where a police constable could not have rightly exercised the authority he did in arresting a person unless he had promoted himself to be an officer in charge of a police station or to the rank of a Sub-Inspector, there is no legal basis for his action, and if the constable is met with resistance in the arrest, S. 99 cannot protect his actions. ——Ss. 147, 148 and 149—Applicability and scope—Rioting by several persons—Some armed with deadly weapons—Murder caused to one victim and severe hurt and simple hurt to others—Offence.

The only offence that S. 148, I. P. Code, describes or refers to is the offence of rioting and provision is made for enhanced punishment if the rioter at the time of rioting is armed with a deadly weapon. S. 149 is intended to lay upon all members of an unlawful assembly responsibility for any offence, other than the offence of rioting committed by any member of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object. S. 149 can hardly have been intended to make rioters constructively guilty of the offence of rioting. There was a disturbance at a place in the course of which one V was fatally wounded, another was very seriously injured, a police constable was slightly injured and a 4th was severely wounded in the foot. On these facts eight persons were put up for trial on charges of rioting. All of them were charged by the Sessions Judge under S. 148 read with S. 149, I. P. Code; the 2nd and 3rd accused were separately charged with the murder of V. The 1st accused was separately charged with voluntarily causing grievous hurt with a deadly weapon to the person who was seriously injured and the 3rd accused was charged with causing hurt to the police constable under S. 332, I. P. Code. Accused 5, 6, 7 and 8 were charged with causing simple hurt to the 4th man who was seriously wounded in the foot and the accused 2 and 3 were charged with causing simple hurt with a dangerous weapon to the 2nd man who was seriously injured. The Sessions Judge found all the accused guilty of all the offences charged, and sentenced the 2nd and 3rd accused to death for murder; he sentenced the 1st accused to 5 years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 326, I. P. Code, and all the accused to 2 years for rioting armed with deadly weapons; he also sentenced the 3rd accused to 2 years under S. 332, I. P. Code, the 2nd and 3rd to 2 years under S. 324, I. P. Code, and accused 5, 6, 7 and 8 to 6 months for causing simple hurt. The evidence was clear that the first three accused were armed with spears and the other five with sticks, but there was no evidence to show that the sticks were dangerous weapons.

Held, that the charges should have been under S. 147 against accused 4 5, 6, 7 and 8, and under S. 148 against accused 1, 2 and 3 only and they should have been convicted accordingly. The other convictions were justified.

Held, further (obiter) that it would have been appropriate to charge all the other accused excepting the 2nd and 3rd with liability for the murder of V under S. 149, I. P. Code. ——Ss. 147 and 379—Conviction—Sustainability—Unlawful assembly and rioting with common object of cutting crops and theft—Accused claiming right to crops and land—Prosecution—If justified—Duty of prosecution to allege and prove specific acts against undivided accused.

Where a charge is brought against several persons of rioting with the common object of cutting away the crops of the complainant and of theft under Ss. 147 and 379, I. P. Code, it cannot always be said that the case is in the nature of a civil dispute and not a fit subject for a criminal trial because some of the accused plead that they are entitled to the land and that they have raised the crops. The real test in such a case is to find out which of the parties had grown the crops. If it is found that the crops were grown by the complainant's party, whoever among the accused party removed the crops would be guilty of theft under S. 379, and if they formed members of an unlawful assembly they would also be guilty under S 147, I. P. Code. It must, however, be proved before any one can be convicted that he not only ranged himself on the side of the accused but took part in the occurrence without any reasonable doubt. It is essential that the case of each individual accused person should be considered, and it is necessary to find what specific acts are proved by the prosecution which brings the individual accused within the mischief of S. 379. In a rioting case, alleging theft also, evidence of a general nature that all the accused

Where a writer of a book is accused of an offence under S. 153-A, I. P. Code, the preface can be no guide with regard to the intention of the accused. The intention has to be judged primarily by the language of the book and the circumstances in which the book was published. If the language is of a nature calculated to produce or to promote feelings of enmity or hatred, the writer must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce. Where the accused gave in his book a collection of only portions of objectionable matter from the Mahomedan scriptures and did not give the full passages concerned, it was held that his intention was to ridicule the prophet and his religion and to promote feelings of enmity between Hindus and Mahomedans and that he was guilty of an offence under S. 153-A, I. PENAL CODE (1860), S. 161.

All that is necessary for the application of S. 161, I. P. Code, is that the gratification should have been offered as a motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do any official act, or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person, or for rendering or forbearing to render any service or disservice to any person. The section does not require that the public servant must in fact be in a position to do the official act, favour or service at the time. If, therefore, a person offers a bribe to a public servant, his act would be punishable as "abetment" of the offence under S. 161 read with S 116, I. P. An accused could be charged alternatively under S. 379 and S. 215, I. P Code, and the trial Court could convict him of either offence. In the substantive offence under S. 215 there is a giver and a taker in an attempt to commit the offence there is merely a proposal or an attempt to enter into an agreement to take from a person who is being induced to give. Where a person who actually stole a bullock was charged along with others who attempted to get an illegal gratification from the owner, it was held that the former should be convicted of theft and the rest under S. 215 read with S. 511 I.P Code. ——Ss. 215 and 379—Applicability of S. 215—Double conviction under Ss. 215 and 379 of thief—Legality.

It is not correct to say that S. 215, Penal Code, does not apply to the actual thief because he is under no legal obligation to bring himself to justice. All that the section says is that the person who takes the gratification shall be punished unless he uses all means in his power to bring the accused thief to justice. No doubt the wording of the section makes it apply in the majority of the cases to offenders other than the actual thief. There is nothing illegal in the double conviction of the actual thief who also takes a gratification under Ss. 215 and 379, but it is only in exceptional cases that a more severe sentence should be passed for both offences than would have been inflicted for theft alone. The words "corruptly and maliciously" in S. 220 are wide enough to cover confinement for the purpose of extortion under S. 347. Where a police Sub-Inspector wrongfully confines certain persons on charges of gambling in futures and extorts money from them by putting them in fear of being challaned in Court upon offences which he knew to be fictitious, the offence falls under S. 220 and not S. 347 or S. 342 and is triable only by a Court of Session. To allow any sacred character to the hut would be to enable the tenant under the guise of religion to vest the shed as a public mosque in the religious body for whose observance it is to be used to the detriment of the landlords, who had only settled the land with him for agricultural purposes. Consequently the destruction of such a hut by the landlords and others does not constitute an offence under ——S. 297—Scope—If limited to religious feelings—Intention—Wounding feelings—Offence.

S. 297 fully deals with offences to which it refers and is self-contained and requires no interpretation by reference to S. 441. The word "trespass" in S. 297 means any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intent as defined in that section. S. 297 does not refer to "religious feelings" though the kind of feelings which comes within the section is clearly limited in its nature by the second paragraph to the section by reference to a place of worship, to a place of sepulture, to feelings of a spiritual nature than a material kind, feelings associated with such sacred places. It does not punish acts which are merely of earthly vanity or pride. That S. 297 is not limited to feelings of a religious nature is clear by the fact that in S. 298 which follows it "religious feelings" are expressly referred to. S. 297 does not refer only to "intention" but also to trespass which is likely to wound the feelings. The complainant on the death of his married daughter and two children erected stones in their memory over their ashes in the cremation ground. The accused who was the complainant's son-in-law eleven years after the death of his wife as a result of a dispute about money matters with the complainant went to the cremation ground and deleted the complainant's name from all the stones on the ground that they were erected out of money provided by him.

Held, that on the evidence and the circumstances of the case the accused's trespass was committed with something more than knowledge; it was committed in a spirit of spite and vindictiveness with intent to wound the feelings of the complainant and that the feelings which were wounded were not merely worldly feelings of vanity and pride. The fact that the stones were erected out of the money provided by the accused did not give him the right to enter the cremation ground and delete the name of the complainant therefrom. (*Davis, C. To give an old woman on her head a blow with a heavy stick, three inches in diameter, with a ferrule at the end, is to do an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury as would be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, within the meaning of Cl. 3 of S. 300, I. The fact that the Public Prosecutor states wrongly that the offence committed was not murder but only an offence under S. 304, Para. 2, I. P. ——Ss. 302, 304 and 324—Injury not likely to cause death—Subsequent death—Injury, only remotely connected with the actual cause of death—Offence.

The injury inflicted by the accused on deceased's head was not such as to entail any serious consequences to a person in normal health. The wound had healed up at the end of seven days in the hospital but the deceased had temperature and on this account was advised to remain in hospital until temperature had subsided. Contrary to medical advice the deceased left hospital. Subsequently as a result of the formation of an abscess on the brain the deceased died. But no death would have resulted if he had not insisted on leaving the hospital against medical advice. His death really ensued because of his weak physical condition due to his suffering from chronic malaria and because his powers of resistance to infection had been much lowered by that disease. No abscess would have formed on the brain if the deceased had been in normal state of health and he died from abscess and not from the injury which had only a remote connexion with the abscess. The immediate cause of the deceased's death was his debilitated condition for which the injury was in no way responsible.

Held, that the accused was guilty of causing simple hurt with a weapon for cutting, punishable under S. 324.

Held, further, that though the use of a dangerous weapon was a matter to be taken into account in deciding questions of intention, still having regard to the medical evidence as to the wound itself, it was impossible to say that there was an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. The offence could not therefore amount even to culpable homicide. Although youth by itself is not such an extenuating circumstance as to justify the imposition of the lesser penalty, regard may be had to the fact that persons of immature age are sometimes more easily provoked and behave in a less responsible manner than their elders. One B was selling fish to J, when a dispute arose regarding the weight of the fish. B's scales were tested and were found to be faulty. A constable who witnessed the dispute directed the two chowkidars to take B and another who supported B to the thana. Held, (1) that the offence alleged to have been committed was non-cognizable and hence S. 54, Cr.P. Reading S. 321 of I. P. Code, with S. 322, I. P. The fact that the language corresponds to some extent does not justify such a conclusion. S. 373 in terms deals with obtaining possession and not merely with obtaining possession from a third person. To say that because an offence under S. 372, which is aimed at disposing of a girl, necessarily involves two parties to the transaction therefore S. 373 which is aimed at obtaining possession, must involve two parties, is a fallacy. intention—Sale of holding under rent decree—Possession delivered to purchaser—Suit in Civil Court to set aside sale—Removal of crops by tenant pending suit—Offence.

The complainant instituted a number of rent suits against a number of his tenants, and obtained rent decrees on 17—11—1938. He put the holdings of the tenants to sale, and purchased them himself on 26—9—1939, and obtained delivery of possession through Court on 30—12—1939. In the meantime on 9—9—1939, the tenants instituted a number of civil suits to have the rent decrees obtained by the complainant set aside On 17—3—1940, pending the suits the ousted tenants with their adherents and companions removed the crops from the fields in the holdings. They were thereupon prosecuted and convicted for theft under S. 379 I. P. Code. The civil suits ultimately ended in decrees by which the sales were set aside.

Held, that the tenants could not be said to have any dishonest intention when they removed the crops while they were contending that the rent decree, and sales were not binding on them. They must be held to be under a bona fide belief that the crops removed by them belonged to themselves, and not to the complainants. They were therefore not guilty of theft and the conviction was unsustainable.

Held, further, that the adherents and companions could not be convicted for helping the tenants in removing the crops, when the principal accused could not be convicted for theft. It does not mean that the assault or the hurt must be caused in the same transaction or in the same circumstances. If the accused first assaults the complainant as a result of a quarrel and hen commits theft of his cash, the assault has no relation whatever to the commission of the theft, although the theft is committed at the same time or immediately afterwards. Consequently, S 397, Penal Code, as it existed prior to its amendment must be applied in a case where the accused committed the offence before 16th March, 1940, but was convicted after that date, inasmuch as it is by reason of the commission of the offence that the offender incurs the punishment and not by reason of his conviction by a Criminal Court. ——S. 482—Offence under—Facts to be proved.

In the case of a prosecution for an offence under S. 482, I. P. Code, it must be proved that the trade mark on the accused's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the complainant's 'get up' but who trusts to memory. Mere differences in detail do not prevent the two designs being essentially the same. The degree of resemblance necessary is a matter incapable of definition a priori. Where every effort had been made by the accused to make his brand of soap resemble that of the complainant and the general colour scheme of his wrapper was the same as that of the complainant, it was held that though the similarity in marks may not amount to counterfeit it was a colourable imitation of the other and that the accused can be convicted under S. 482, I. P. Code. (Ismail, J.) ROSHAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1940) All. 751 = 193 I.C. 189 = 13 R.A. 395 = 42 Cr.L.J. 352 = 1940 A.W.R. (H.C.) 645 = 1940 A L.J. 878 = A.I.R. 1941 All. 87.

——Ss. 482 and 486—Distinction between—Conviction under both—Legality.

The distinction between false trade mark and counterfeit trade mark is somewhat subtle. It depends on the degree of resemblance between the false and genuine trade marks The offence under S. 482, I P. Code, will be complete as soon as a false trade mark has been used, but under S. 486 it will be necessary that the goods should be sold or possessed or exposed for sale. Hence it is perfectly legal to convict a person under both sections provided it is found that the mark on the goods of the accused was a false trade mark and also that it was a counterfeit trade mark. ——S. 486—Offence under—Requisites.

Though the imitation need not be exact, there should be close resemblance to constitute an offence under S. 486, I P. Code. Where accused's soap though similar in get up and other details to that of the complainant, contained 'No. 301' and 'India' in the place of 'No. 501' and 'Tomco' contained in the soap of the complainant, the accused cannot be convicted under S 486 for it is impossible to say that either the No. 301 is a counterfeit of 'No. 501' or that 'India' is a counterfeit of 'Tomco.' Where the complainant in a case of a defamation dies during the course of trial, the magistrate can exercise the discretion vested in him by S. 259, Cr. P. But in S. 259 which applies to the case of defamation, the converse is the case. Where a complainant is absent and the offence is compoundable or non-cognizable, the magistrate may discharge the accused or he may decide to proceed with the trial. S. 198, Cr. P. Code, only limits the power of the Court to initial cognizance of the offence. Once the Court has seizin of the case there is nothing to prevent the Court proceeding with it. PENSIONS ACT (XXIII OF 1871)—Punjab Pension and Revenue Assignment Rules, 1937, R. 12—Order in proceeding relating to succession of jagir—Second appeal—Revision.

No second appeal lies to the Financial Commission from an order of the Commissioner passed on appeal from an order of the Deputy Commissioner in a proceeding relating to the succession of a jagir. Under R. 12 of the Pension and Revenue Assignment Rules, 1937, the provisions of Chap. II of the Land Revenue Act apply to proceedings of Revenue Officers under the rules, and therefore the Financial Commissioner has wide powers of revision conferred by S. 16 of the Land Revenue Act. The Financial Commissioner must exercise his powers of revision in dealing with cases under these rules rather more freely than is the case in regard to mutation proceedings, for instance, which concern disputes which must eventually be decided in the Civil Courts. ——Ss. 4, 5 and 6—Claims relating to grants of land revenue—Methods of obtaining adjudication—Jurisdiction of Revenue and Civil Courts—Parties acquiescing in obtaining adjudication in Revenue Court—If can be granted certificate under S. 6.

PENSIONS ACT (1871), S. 6.

The Pensions Act provides two methods of settling claims relating to grants of land revenue as to which the jurisdiction of Civil Courts is barred by S. 4 of that Act Under S. 5 of the Act such claims may be disposed of by the revenue authorities and under S. 6 a Civil Court may take cognisance of disputes between rival claimants to the enjoyment of a grant of land revenue only if a certificate is granted by the revenue authorities that the case is one which it is appropriate that a Civil Court should try. Under R. 11 of the Punjab Pension and Revenue Assignment Rules the power of granting such a certificate is vested in the Financial Commissioner only and not in any subordinate revenue authority. It is clear, therefore, that any person who has a claim relating to any grant of land revenue other than a claim against Government direct may proceed in one of two separate ways. He may apply to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 5 of the Act for the adjudication of his claim or he may apply to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 6 or to the Financial Commissioner direct asking that the Financial Commissioner should grant a certificate that the dispute is one that may be tried by the Civil Courts. These two ways of obtaining adjudication on a claim must be regarded as alternative and it is open to a claimant to choose which of the two methods he will follow. But if both parties have acquiesced in obtaining adjudication on the merits of the case by the revenue authorities, it is inappropriate to grant a certificate which would permit the matter to be reagitated de novo in a different forum. (Mitchell, F. C.) SADHU RAM v. ABID BEG. 20 Lah.L T. 94.

——S. 6—Application for certificate rejected by Collector—Proper procedure.

If an application for grant of a certificate under S. 6 of the Pensions Act is rejected by the Collector, the proper procedure is to apply to the Commissioner for reversal of the Collector's order. But as the rules prescribe that a certificate can only be granted by the Financial Commissioner, it is not unreasonable to make an application direct to his Court. (Mitchell, F.C.) SADHU RAM v. ABID BEG. 20 Lah.L.T. 94.

——S. 6—Application for grant of certificate—If may be made after adjudication by Revenue Court.

If a party to a dispute under the Pensions Act wishes the exceptional procedure of S. 6 to be followed, he must apply for the grant of a certificate under that section before and not after the matter has been the subject of final adjudication by the highest revenue authorities under S. 5 of the Act. In such cases, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is entirely barred by S. 4 of the Act, and the regular procedure for adjudication of disputes is that prescribed by S. 5. The revival of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts provided by S. 6 on a certificate from the revenue authorities is clearly intended to be an exceptional alternative to the adjudication prescribed in S. 5, and after the parties have fought out their respective claims in the revenue forum up to the highest revenue authority it would not be correct to permit the whole matter to be reopened in the alternative forum of the Civil Courts. ——S. 30—Conditions of licence—Duty of licensee to explain to processionists.

Per Bhide, J.—The object of the licence is to secure observance of certain conditions by every member of the procession and not merely by the licensee. The licence is granted to the directors or promoters of the procession as a matter of convenience as it will not be practicable to require every potential member of a procession to take out a licence. The directors or promoters of a procession who take out a licence in such a case therefore become responsible for the conduct of the processionists. It will obviously be the duty of the licensee in such a case to explain the conditions of the licence to all who wish to take part in the procession. ——Ss. 30 and 32—Licence, if required for every procession—Joining unlicensed procession—If offence.

Per Bhide, J.—It cannot be said that a licence under S. 30 is required for every procession. A licence is required to be taken under S. 30 only when a breach of the peace is apprehended by the authorities concerned. It is therefore no offence to join a procession merely because no licence has been taken for it under S. 30. Even when a general or a special notice is issued under S. 30, requiring persons "directing or promoting" a procession to apply for a licence but no licence is obtained and yet a procession is taken out, it is only those persons who are "directors" or promoters of the procession who can be convicted under S. 32 for disobedience of the order and not ordinary members of the procession. The respondent, a postman, was charged by the police with an offence under S. 52 of the Post Office Act for secreting two postal articles in course of transmission by post and was committed for trial by the Court of Session. There was no complaint by order or authority from the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs or Postmaster-General. Held, that the offence under S. 52 could be taken cognizance of without any complaint and the commitment was legal. ———Appeal—Competency—Suit filed as small cause suit - Disposal by Judge having small cause powers—Right of appeal—Suit numbered as original suit—Effect.

When a suit is filed as a small cause suit and is actually disposed of by a Judge who has the necessary powers to try it as a small cause suit, it must be deemed to have been disposed of as a small cause suit, and therefore there can be no right of appeal against the decree in the suit. A Court of appeal always attaches a great weight to the opinion of the trial Judge on the credibility of the witnesses called before him and it would be contrary to settled principles that the appellate Court should substitute its opinion on the facts based on the written depositions for the opinion of the trial Judge who saw the witnesses in the box. A decision arrived at on a consideration of the oral evidence cannot be lightly differed from and it is not open to the appellate Court to consider the evidence in print before it and find out whether it would have come to the same conclusion as the ——Appeal—Finding of fact—Interference.

If it is not safe for the appellate Court to draw a particular inference from the evidence, it is not safe for the trial Judge to draw that inference. Not safe, means that there is not evidence from which the inference can reasonably be drawn. There are cases in which evidence is so well balanced that an inference either way can reasonably be drawn. In such cases, the appellate tribunal may select the inference they choose; but they can have no equal choice between an inference that is safe, and one that is unsafe. ——Appeal—Finding of fact—Interference.

In a civil appeal the Court should not interfere with findings of fact unless it is satisfied that the trial Court is clearly wrong. The judgment must show that the findings of the trial Court and the reasons therefor have been fully considered by the appellate Court Further the appellate Court should give its reasons for reversing the findings of the trial Court if it decides to reverse them. It cannot be said that a judgment of reversal is not a proper judgment merely because all the reasons given by the original Court are not discussed. If the reasons given by the appellate Court are so cogent as to justify the finding, no discussion of other less convincing reasons is necessary. Consequently, in such a case omission to discuss all the reasons given by the original Court is perfectly justified. (Khundkar and Lodge, JJ.) SASHI KUMARI DEVI v. DHIRENDRA KISHORE.

———Appeal—New plea—Plea of res judicata*—If can be entertained and given effect to in appeal for first time —Subsequent events—Duty of Court to take note of.*

Ordinarily it is not permissible for an appellate Court to affirm the decision of the trial Court giving effect to a plea of res judicata taken before itself for the first time. But when the final finding on which the plea rests is given while the appeal is pending, the appellate Court is not only justified, but bound to take notice of the final judgment arrived at between the parties and give effect to the same. PRACTICE—Appeal.

——Appeal—Subsequent events—Power of appellate Court to take note of subsequent legislation and to grant relief on basis of same—Rule—Nature of appeal.

An appellate Court is entitled to take into account legislative changes since the decision under appeal was given. The Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction has the power not only to correct error in the judgment under appeal but to make such disposition of the case as justice requires; and in determining what justice does require, the Court is bound to consider any change, either in fact or law, which has supervened since the judgment was entered. An appeal is in the nature of a re-hearing, and in moulding the relief to be granted in a case on appeal, the Court of appeal is entitled to take into account even facts and events which have come into existence after the decree appealed against. The duty of the Court is to administer the law of the land at the date when the Court is administering it, and the appeal may be heard and determined on the basis of a provision in an enactment passed only during the pendency of the appeal. A suit was filed on two mortgages dated 9-6 1928 and 24-8 1929. The first mortgage was over property A, and the second was over A and B. There was a subsequent mortgage in favour of the appellant over B alone. A preliminary decree was passed and it recited separately the amounts due on each mortgage. Subsequently this decree was made final. The preliminary decree, in which the sums due under the two mortgages were kept apart, provided that the property A should be sold first and in the event of that property not producing the total amount due to the decree-holder, the property comprised in the second mortgage should be sold to satisfy the decree. In the sale proclamation it was declared that properties would be sold in satisfaction of the amount of the two decrees (the total amount being given). The sale of property A realised an amount which was not sufficient to satisfy the decree on the first mortgage. Property B was then put up for sale; the decree-holder who was the purchaser under the first sale was also the purchaser in the second sale. The amount realised was sufficient to satisfy the balance due to the decree-holder under the two decrees together, though it was more than the amount due under the second mortgage, i.e., the mortgage over property B. The appellant, the subsequent mortgagee of property B, who had also been impleaded in the suit as a party defendant applied to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground, inter alia, that the decree-holder-purchaser was bound to deposit into Court the balance of the sale price in excess of the amount due under the second mortgage, and not having done so, the property must be re-sold.

Held (1), that the preliminary decree and the final decree based upon it must be construed as a whole, and on such construction, it was never the intention of the Court in drawing up the decree that the properties comprised in either of the mortgages could be sold to satisfy more than what was due on the mortgage relating to the particular property; (2) that property B could never be made to bear a greater burden than the amount due on the mortgage on that property; (3) that the decree-holder was not entitled under the decree to appropriate the surplus in the 2nd sale towards the deficiency due to him in respect of the first mortgage, i.e., on property A, but had to deposit it into Court under O. 21, R. 16. When it is a question of protecting himself against the effects of a judgment obtained by collusion, it is open to a third party to the judgment to ask that it should be treated as void so far as his interests are concerned, though it may be binding on the parties to the judgment and so has to remain upon the record. His proper remedy is by way of a civil suit. When a question of collusion thus arises, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to have overheard the other parties conspiring together or to have obtained some secret information as to the details of the conspiracy. It is sufficient for him to show in the first instance that the obvious and the necessary effect of the voluntary settlement was to defeat his legitimate interests; and if it cannot be shown on the other side that there was any other motive for the settlement, the Courts are entitled to presume that the intention was to defraud the party injuriously affected. amounts to—Conspiracy and trick to deceive Court and defendant.

It is established that a decree will not be set aside merely on proof that it was oblained by perjury or that the document upon which it is based was a forged document. The questions whether there was any perjury or forgery are matters which must be taken to have been decided in the suit itself. Where, however, the plaintiff in a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud, alleges that there was a deliberate conspiracy of a number of people not only to hoodwink the Court into passing a wrong decree, but also to deceive the plaintiff (defendant in the former suit) as to the nature of the suit and by a trick to prevent him from resisting the suit, there is a case of fraud much wider than the scope of the matters in the actual suit wherein the wrong decree was obtained and the allegations amount to a case of fraud extrinsic to the matters adjudicated upon in the earlier suit so as to justify the cancellation or setting aside of that decree on the ground that it has been obtained by fraud. ———Execution—Application for—Duty of decree-holder—Subsequent application filing supplementary list of properties to be proceeded with—Discretion of Court to allow—Such application, if continuation of old.

The law requires that a decree-holder in executing a decree should indicate in his application for execution the various modes of execution, which he wishes the Court to adopt. He should also as far as possible indicate the properties of the judgment-debtor against which execution proceedings should be taken, it being of course understood that he should not take execution proceedings against more items of property than he considers sufficient to satisfy his decree. Provided the application for execution is in accordance with law and has been duly registered, if a subsequent application is filed for the purpose of amending the list of properties against which the decree-holder wishes to proceed, the Court is vested with a reasonable discretion to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the case. Of course, to accept such a petition would result in effect in the amendment of the application for execution. Such an amendment should not be allowed, if it has the effect of substantially altering the character of the execution proceedings, but in a case in which it was discovered on the objection of the judgment-debtor himself that execution could not proceed against the attached properties, the Court would exercise a reasonable discretion in accepting a supplementary petition filed by the decree-holder asking for permission to be allowed to add several other properties to the list given in his original application. The subsequent petition should be regarded as a continuation of the original application and not as a fresh application for purposes of limitation. ———Execution—Minor—Representation in proceedings—Necessity for—Non-representation—Remedy.

It may be taken as settled law that proceedings in execution would not be set aside where the interests of a minor had in effect been represented, though not in form as when his interests are identical with those of other members of his family. But there is no case in which it has been held that it is not necessary in execution proceedings that the interests of a minor should be represented in some way or another. The law regarding the attachment and alienation of land in execution proceedings contemplates that some opportunity should be given to the judgment-debtor of raising any valid objection he may have with regard to the liability of his land to attachment and the protection thus afforded becomes useless if the land can be alienated without notice being given to any one who can be said to represent the interests of a minor judgment debtor. In such circumstances, any one prepared to represent the minor judgment-debtor has the right to come forward and claim that the proceedings in execution should be set aside. Such relief can be claimed only by an application under S. 47, C. P. Code, to the executing Court, and not by means of a separate suit, as the matter is clearly one relating to the execution of the decree. No Court will allow itself to be used as an instrument of fraud, and no Court, by the application of the rules of evidence or procedure, can allow its eyes to be closed to the fact that it is being used as an instrument of fraud. Once the Court finds that the plaintiff is seeking its assistance to enable him to get the benefit of what is a fraud, the Court refuses to assist him. If, as a result of such refusal, the defendant is left in possession of some advantage derived from his own fraud, that is not due to any action on the part of the Court. It is a fraud for a plaintiff to claim beneficial title under a deed in respect of which he is a benamidar, and the Court cannot refuse to allow the defendant to prove the benami nature of the transaction, even though in doing so the defendant may have to rely on his own wrongdoing. Rs. 12,500 by way of damages, the Master held that the damages claimed could not in any event exceed Rs. 5,000 and that therefore the plaintiff should be referred to a Court of lower jurisdiction to agitate his claim.

Held, that the claim for damages for slander being one in which the damages were at large, the damages could not be ascertained until there had been an examination of all the evidence; nor could it be said that they could not in any event exceed any particular sum, and therefore the summary dismissal of the application for leave to sue as pauper was wrong. A right of easement must no doubt be specifically pleaded, but pleadings are often so loosely expressed in the mofussil that it may be doing an injustice to litigants in many cases to construe them much too strictly. In pleading an easement on the basis of a lost grant the essential fact to aver is user or enjoyment for a sufficient length of time which might give rise to the presumption of such a grant. Ordinarily such length of user will exceed the statutory period of 20 years required for acquiring an easement by prescription under S. 26 of the Limitation Act. To plead an easement on the presumption of a lost grant may from that point of view be said to involve a pleading of easement by prescription, assuming, of course, an averment of the other elements necessary for establishing such a right. questions as to corroboration or contradiction of testimony, or as to whether there was sufficient evidence to satisfy the burden of proof. Neither is it concerned to review the exercise by the previous tribunal of its discretion as to permitting cross examination as a hostile witness or in awarding particular punishments. Broadly speaking, the judicial committee will only interfere where there has been an infringement of the essential principles of justice. An obvious example would be a conviction following a trial, where it could be seriously contended that there was a refusal to hear the case of the accused, or where the trial took place in his absence, or where he was not allowed to call relevant wttnesses. Similarly, of course, if the tribunal was shown to have been corrupt or not properly constituted, or incapable of understanding the proceedings because of the language in which the proceedings were conducted. respective shares of widow and children—Ascertainment of shares of children—Duty of Court—Suit if should be framed as administration suit.

W. B., a Burman Buddhist, died intestate on 28—12—1907, leaving him surviving a son (appellant), two daughters and a widow (4th respondent) and three children of a son K.P.C., who had predeceased him by only 15 days. The plaintiff was the widow of that predeceased son K.P.C. The plaintiff who had re-married in 1910, brought a suit in 1912 against the appellant K.S., his sister and her three children by her deceased husband, claiming a share not in the whole estate of K.P.C., but in the properties, movable and immovable, standing in the joint names of K.P.C. and K. and in the joint names of K.P.C., K.S. and W. B. The trial Court determined the share of the plaintiff (widow) but refused to do so in respect of the shares of her children who were made defendants to the suit on the ground that the suit was only a suit for partition, and not an administration suit. The pleadings in the suit however raised a distinct question between the plaintiff and her children as to their respective shares in the subject-matter of the suit and an issue was framed for the purpose of deciding that question. The preliminary decree, moreover, directed an enquiry not merely as to the plaintiff's share, but as to the entire share of K.P.C. in the subject-matter of the suit. On appeal by the three children, the High Court held that whether the suit be described technically as a suit for partition or as a suit for administration, it was a clear duty of the Court to declare not only what properties or shares therein formed the estate of K.P.C., but also to declare the rights of the plaintiff and her children in such properties; the High Court therefore set aside the decree of the trial Court and remanded the case for the purpose of enabling the three children to prosecute their claims and of having a proper final decree drawn up.

Held, that though the suit was not a suit for the administration of K.P.C.'s estate and there was no claim for administration or accounts or enquiries usually directed in such a suit, that in no way concluded the matter, and in the circumstances of the case it was not only competent for the Court to ascertain and declare the shares of the three children of K.P.C., but it was the Court's plain duty to do so, and that the three children, though defendants, were entitled to have their interests in the properties, the subject-matter of the suit, determined by the Court and should not be forced to bring a separate suit for that purpose. ——Relief—Grant of lesser relief—Suit for declaration of title—Plaintiff in possession under written instrument—Written instrument found inadmissible—Declaration that plaintiff was in lawful possession—If can be granted.

Where in a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title to the property of which he was in possession under a written instrument of transfer, the written instrument of transfer is found to be inadmissible for want of registration, the proper course for the plaintiff is to apply for amendment of the pleadings by changing his cause of action from one based on an actual transfer of title to one based on part performance under a personal contract. The absence of such an amendment is not a fatal defect provided the main facts are sufficiently clear. The plaintiff's suit in such a case cannot be dismissed altogether on the ground of the instrument of transfer being inadmissible but the plaintiff is entitled to a lesser relief, namely, a declaration that he is lawfully in possession of the property in dispute which was delivered to him and over which he has a lien for the purchase-money paid by him to the vendor. The custom of pre-emption, however, exists only as between free holders, that is to say, the neighbouring land in respect of which the custom is claimed must be free hold, and the land sought to be pre-empted must also be free-hold. The right of pre-emption under the Mohomedan law attaches only to sales of proprietary interest in the land and does not extend to property held under a precarious lease-hold tenure. Although the right of pre-emption does not apply to British India generally, it has been adopted by custom in certain localities, and the custom as adopted in a particular locality must be in accordance with the law as it originally was. Therefore in places where the law of pre-emption exists by custom, it must be regarded as a right annexed or attached to the land and not as a mere personal right. In the case of a claim for pre-emption the question whether the purchase by the pre-emptor is benami is an inadmissible notion. If the pre-emptor produces money and has the requisite qualifications for pre empting, the Court has no cause for going into his bona fides or to trace the origin of the money which he has offered to pay. The basic principle is that after all the statutory right to pre-empt depends on certain qualifications and the production of money, and when those requirements are met with nothing else remains but to grant a decree. ———Right to—Sale of land—Compromise, if amounts to

A pre-emption suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 1,800. This sum was deposited in Court and was taken out by the vendees. Subsequently, the pre-emptor applied for execution of his decree by being put in possession of the land and during the execution proceedings the pre-emptor and the vendee entered into a compromise whereby the vendees paid Rs. 2,000 to the pre-emptor to cover the cost of the land and the expenses incurred by him in the litigation and the pre-emptor agreed that the suit should be considered as dismissed. Rs. 2 000 was paid in the presence of the Court which passed an order that the execution should be filed in full satisfaction.

Held, that the question of whether a sale was a sale of land or not must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, and that there was an out and out sale of land by virtue of the compromise inasmuch as the land had vested in the pre emptor by virtue of the decree when he deposited Rs. 1,800 in Court and he was at the time of the compromise the absolute owner of the property of which he could get possession by execution (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, J.) INZAR GUL v. HAJAB GUL. 194 I.C. 92 = 13 R. PRESIDENCY TOWNS INSOLVENCY ACT (III OF 1909), (as amended in 1927), S 7. Proviso —Construction and scope—"Any matter arising under S. 36"—Meaning and effect of—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court—When ousted—Question of title—Jurisdiction to decide.

There is no ambiguity whatever in the language used in S. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, by the Legislature, and the only matters which arise under

PRESY. TOWNS INSOL. ACT (1909) S. 9

S. 36 for purposes of the proviso to S. 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act as amended in 1927, are alleged indebtnedess to the insolvent by a third party and alleged possession by a third party of any property belonging to the insolvent. The proviso to S. 7 would not therefore come into operation unless the proceedings under S 7 involve the decision of such a matter arising under S 36. If the third party summoned under S. 36 admits his indebtedness to the insolvent or admits his possession of property belonging to the insolvent, the Court has power to deal with him under Cls. (4) and (5) of S. 36. If the person summoned under S. 36 denies his indebtedness to the insolvent or denies that he has in his possession or power any property belonging to the insolvent, the Court has no power under S 36 to deal further with that person under S 36 and is precluded from deciding such matters in insolvency jurisdiction by the proviso to S. 7, unless all the parties agree. Where, however, the question is not whether the person summoned is indebted to the insolvent or whether he is in his possession of, or has in his power, any property belonging to the insolvent, but whether the person summoned has a title to certain disputed property, the proviso to S. 7 is no bar to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court dealing with and disposing of the matter involved. A matter may be said to arise under S. 36 of the Act, although no person may have been summoned and examined under that action. Similarly, even if a person has been summoned and examined under S 36, the mere fact of his examination would not bring into operation the proviso to S. 7 unless the matter of the examination is such as arises under S. 36, and thus relates to the indebtedness to the party examined to the insolvent, or to the fact of possession by him of property belonging to the insolvent. Where the dispute between the Official Assignee and the person examined is not matter of possession but a matter of title to property, the matter is not one arising under S. 36, and the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Csurt under S. 7 is not ousted by the proviso to that section. Where a creditor's petition for adjudication states that the debtor has given notice to his creditors that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts, and the affidavit verifying the petition shows that this is in fact the case, there is sufficient compliance with the law's requirements. The petition and the affidavit should be read together, and if the petitioning creditor sets out in detail the facts on which he is relying, the debtor can have no complaint whether the information is contained in the petition or the affidavit. Where the Court annulling an adjudication directed that the assets should remain in the hands of the Official Assignee subject to the further order of the Court.

Held, that the effect of that order was not to vest the debtor's property in the Official Assignee under S. 23 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act but to cause such property to revert to the debtor on condition that the assets already in the hands of the Official Assignee were to remain in his hands subject to the further order of the Court. In such a case the Court, on the application of the creditor who has not participated, can order the other creditors who have been paid to pay back to the Official Assignee, such amount each as would be necessary to make up the proper dividend payable to the creditor concerned on the amount of his claim. inter alia, exhorted the labourers in these words. "Labourers. Raise now the cry of Revolution. The Heavens will tremble, the universe will shake and the flames of revolution will burst forth from land and water. You who have been the subject of exploitation. Now dance the fearful dance of destruction on this earth Truly, labourers, only total destruction will create a new world order and that will bring happiness to the whole world".

Held, (1) that it could not be said that these words tended to bring into hatred or contempt any class or section of His Majesty's subjects; the words "masters or exploiters" were too wide to denote a definite or ascertainable class so as to come with Cl. (d) of S. 4 (1) of the Press Act and the poem did not therefore come within the mischief of S. 4 (1) (d); (2) that the revolution contemplated by the poet was clearly revolution through violence, and that the exhortation was obviously an exhortation to the labourers to destroy the existing social order and to destroy it by force and violence, and clearly came within S. 4 (1) (a) of the Act. Bloody revolution and forcible and violent destruction of the present social order involved all kinds of cognisable offences involving violence and would in all probability involve murder, and it was unnecessary to show that the words tended to incite to or to encourage the commission of a particular offence or offences. The object of S. 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to prevent other creditors from being injured by the action of one creditor who by reason of collusion or otherwise may not diligently prosecute his petition; a second creditor who is substituted under S. 16 on the ground that the original petitioning creditor was not prosecuting with due diligence, gets the benefit of the date of the original petition, no matter how much later may be the date of his own introduction into the case. The mere accident of the fact that the creditor who originally filed the petition should turn out not to have been qualified to do so will not prevent the subsequent creditor, who but for that petition might well have filed one himself, from taking advantage of its date. The effect of the insolvency of a member of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family is to vest his interest in the joint family property in the receiver who, so to say steps into the shoes of the former. If the insolvent happens to be the father of the other coparceners of the joint family consisting of himself and his descendants, the receiver in insolvency would have all the powers which the insolvent had. The receiver would thus be able to bind by his sale the share of the other coparceners, if the insolvent himself could have sold for those debts of his the joint property including the share of his descendants, that is to say, the receiver will have the powers to bind the non-insolvent coparceners by his sale of the entire joint property, provided the family at the time of his sale was still undivided, and provided the sale is for the liquidation of the personal debts of the father (insolvent) which were not of immoral nature. The position, therefore, is that he steps into the shoes of the father who has become insolvent. In accordance with this principle he will not be entitled to take possession of the entire joint undivided properties, but would only be entitled to joint possession with the other non-insolvent coparceners of the family. The obligation on the part of an insolvent under the Hindu Law to pay maintenance allowance to his brother's widow is a debt provable in insolvency as laid down in S. 34 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. His liability is not a personal liability, but a liability which has got to be met from the property which he inherited from his father and this property is now vested in the receiver for the benefit of the creditors. If the brother's widow has a charge declared upon the property in respect of her maintenance allowance by a competent Court, the receiver may be compelled to pay the money out of the estate in his hands. But in the absence of a charge, she can only rank as an ordinary creditor and can prove the liability in insolvency proceedings. ——S. 37—Scope—Vesting order under—Effect of.

Where the property of an insolvent is vested in the Official Receiver or any other appointee under S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it is the Insolvency Court which retains control of it and the Insolvency Court must direct its disposal in the interests of the general body of creditors. The property comes completely under the Insolvency Court and can only be disposed of under its direction. The property can only be distributed equally among all the creditors and no one creditor has got a right to appropriate the money of the insolvent to the exclusion of other creditors. Where the property is, by the order under S. 37, vested in the Official Receiver or other appointee in the interests of the general body of creditors, there is a statutory trust created by virtue of the order in favour of the creditors. ——S. 37—Vesting order under—Subsequent decree against insolvent and Official Receiver obtained by one creditor—Effect—Payment of money to creditor by Receiver under order of executing Court—Power of Insolvency Court to order refund.

The question whether one creditor is entitled to appropriate the money which is intended for the distribution among all creditors of the insolvent, in priority to other creditors, can only be adjudicated in the presence of the creditors by the Court which has jurisdiction in insolvency; the Official Receiver by himself cannot be said to represent the creditors in regard to the decision on the question of priority. An order of an executing Court that a decree obtained by an individual creditor against the Official Receiver and the insolvent after a vesting order under S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is executable does not in any way affect the power of the Insolvency Court over the fund at its disposal. The fact that the Official Receiver is compelled by order of an executing Court to pay moneys in his hands cannot affect the power of the Insolvency Court to make orders regarding the money in the hands of the Receiver; and it s competent to the Insolvency Court to direct a refund of any sum of money taken away by a creditor, who is amenable to its jurisdiction, in excess of what he is justly entitled to. Where a proposal for composition has not been duly accepted by the creditors under S. 38 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, it is open to the Court to approve the proposal under S. 38 (7). The Provincial Insolvency Act seems to contemplate a possibility that public morality and the interests of the general body of creditors may both require that such a proposal be accepted. The Legislature has armed the Court with power to accept the proposal even though the creditors have not accepted it. An Insolvency Court could only reasonably approve a proposal that had been refused by the creditors in very extraordinary circumstances involving very unusual behaviour on the part of the creditors refusing. Some sort of exceptional circumstances would be necessary before a Court could properly approve a proposal that the creditors had refused. But when an application for discharge is filed after the time fixed and a separate application is also filed showing cause for delay in applying for discharge, and the Court orders notice to creditors directing the discharge petition to be admitted, it does not mean that the delay has been condoned. ——S. 43—Failure of insolvent to appear on date fixed—Courses open to Court.

The Insolvency Court is not bound to pass an order annulling the adjudication under S. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act when the insolvent fails to appear on the date fixed for hearing his application for discharge or at any of the times mentioned in that section. That section can be interpreted as allowing an Insolvency

Court to postpone annulment after default either by extending the time in which the debtor is to apply for his discharge or by merely postponing the actual pronouncement after the default has occurred. On this view, there will be two courses open to the Court when an insolvent fails to appear on the date fixed. If there is still any considerable estate to be administered, and more particularly if there are any outstanding claims with regard to property transferred before adjudication, then it would be much simpler and also work for more efficient control if the Court postpones the order of adjudication instead of assuming control under S. 37. On the other hand, if there are no such outstanding disputes, the Court may find it more convenient to annul the adjudication at once even though there is still some estate to be administered and in that case it would still have jurisdiction to exercise some control over the subsequent administration of the estate and any connected proceedings. The first appellant was adjudicated an insolvent on 26—3—1927 on a petition presented on 2—10—1926. He had no assets and so his creditors took no interest in the proceedings after the adjudication. The result was that his application for discharge was unopposed and it was granted on 8—2—1928. H had obtained a decree against the first appellant and on 21—2—1923, H attached a house as property belonging to the first appellant. In fact the house was the property of his wife, having been transferred to her by the first appellant on 12—2—1923, and the transfer had been upheld as lawful. The wife's application for removal of the attachment was dismissed, as also her suit which followed. The representatives of H sought to have the house sold in execution of the decree in favour of H and it was contended in defence that the order of discharge granted to the appellant had the effect of making the decree debt unenforceable under S. 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Held, that the 1st appellant was released, by reason of the statute, from all liability to pay the decree debt; as the wife of the insolvent was under no personal obligation to pay the debt and did not come under any of the categories mentioned in S. 44 (3) of the Act, a creditor of the insolvent was not entitled to bring the house to sale after the discharge. A mortgagor's personal liability under the mortgage deed is a debt provable in insolvency within the meaning of S. 44 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and such liability would be discharged by an order of absolute discharge. A mortgagee is not therefore entitled to apply under O. 34, R. 6, C. P. In execution of a decree against K, three lots of properties were sold in auction on 30th June, 1933, at the instance of the appellant. Two lots were sold for Rs. 7,500 which amount was paid in full then and there. This third lot was sold for Rs 4,520. and 25 per cent. of this was deposited on 30th June. 1933 and the remaining three quarters on 4th July, 1933. The amount of Rs. 12.020, thus realised, was rateably distributed between the appellant and another creditor. On 3rd July, 1933, an insolvency petition was presented against K, and he was adjudicated. The Official Receiver applied to the Court for an order directing the appellant and the other creditor to pay to him the sums which had been distributed to them with interest under S. 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. On the insolvency petition which was presented on 3rd July, 1933, the Court ordered "check and file emergently", and it was so checked and filed, and the Court on the same day ordered publication charges to be deposited by 7th July, 1933. On 7th July, 1933, notice and publication were ordered. It was contended that the insolvency petition was not admitted till 7th July, 1933, and therefore the Official Receiver could not claim the amounts from the creditors to whom it had been distributed.

PROV. INSOLV. ACT (1920), S. 51.

Held, (1) that the Court having, on 3rd July, 1933, accepted the insolvency petition as having been validly presented, the petition must be deemed to have been admitted on that date and not on 7th July, 1933, and therefore any assets realised after 3rd July, 1933, must go to the Official Receiver; (2) that the sale of three lots of property, though originating from a single proclamation of sale, was really equivalent to three sales, and the assets in respect of the first two lots must therefore be held to have been realised on 30th June, 1933, on which the full amount of Rs. 7,500 was deposited, and the Official Receiver could not therefore claim the same; (3) that the sale proceeds in respect of the third lot must be deemed to have been realised only on 4th July, 1933, when the full amount was paid in respect of that lot, and that being after the insolvency petition was admitted on 3rd July, 1933, the creditors including the appellant had no title to retain the same; (4) that "the benefit of execution" in S. 51 (1) meant the sum realised less the costs of execution, and the appellant and the other creditors could therefore deduct such costs of execution as were necessary to realise the Rs. 4,500 payable to the Official Receiver; (5) that the Official Receiver was entitled to interest on the amount as the matter was analogous to restitution. ——S. 54—Burden of proof—Transaction resulting in preference of creditor—If to be presumed fraudulent preference.

It is well settled that the burden of proving that a transaction by the insolvent, which is impugned under S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, amounts to a fraudulent preference, is on the Official Receiver. It is enough for the Official Receiver to show that the transaction was voluntary in the sense that it was not induced by real or genuine pressure exerted on the insolvent and that it resulted in the preference of one creditor over other creditors. The fact that the creditor who is in fact preferred fails to give any other explanation for the transaction does not necessarily lead to the presumption that it was effected with the view or intent of preferring that creditor. The onus is on the Official Receiver to prove that the dominant or real intention of the insolvent was to prefer the creditor, and the Court must be satisfied upon the evidence before it that such intention was present. ——S. 54—Fraudulent preference—Shifting of onus of proof—Principles—Circumstances sufficient to shift onus.

In the case of fraudulent preference, as regards the shifting of the onus of proof, some distinction should be made between debtors' and creditors' petitions. Those creditors' petitions which are the result of acts of insolvency which leave no doubt but that the creditor is contemplating insolvency have to be placed in the same class as debtor's petitions. In such cases it would take a smaller amount of evidence to shift the onus of proof on to the creditor who seeks to annul the transaction.

PROV. INSOLV. ACT (1920), S. 54.

Where however a creditor files a petition and puts forward as an act of insolvency the very transaction which he subsequently seeks to annul, then something more than the mere making of payment on the eve of insolvency is required. How much more would depend on the circumstances of the individual case. (Stone, C. J. and Clarke, J.) RAMGUI ZARILAL v. ——Ss. 56 and 4—Power of Court to direct delivery of possession—Person in possession claiming title thereto—Proper remedy—Claimant seeking to recover possession obtained by receiver or Court—Creditors, if necessary parties to such proceedings.

The Court has no power under S. 56, Provincial Insolvency Act, summarily to direct a third person to deliver up possession of property of which he is in possession if he sets up a title, however flimsy, to it. The only power the Court has in such circumstances is to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not under S. 4. But before that can be done a proper application has to be presented by the receiver, when there is one, or by such one of the creditors or other person interested in preserving the insolvent's estate as the Court authorises to act when there is not. Where the Court or receiver enters into possession of such property without any obstruction from the claimant for some reason, then the latter's remedy to recover possession, whatever the nature of the proceedings, would have to be under S. 4 and should be against the person or authority in whom the property has vested. These could certainly not be a creditor or the body of creditors. Hence they are not necessary parties to such proceedings. (Bose, J.) JASODABAI v. SHRIKISHAN RADHAKISHAN. I.L.R. The Provincial Insolvent Act does not provide for sales by the Court such as are provided for in the C. P. Code. A sale in insolvency proceedings, whether it be a sale at auction or a direct one by the Official Receiver to a particular person, is nothing more than a transfer by act of parties. Since the Official Receiver is an agent of the Court, it may be said that a sale effected by him is a sale under the Court, but it is certainly not a sale by the Court. Hence for title to pass to the vendee at such a sale a registered instrument is necessary as required by the Transfer of Property Act. ——Ss. 68 and 75—Official Receiver—If representative of creditors—Receiver refusing to prefer second appeal—Right of individual creditor to prefer appeal—Leave to appeal granted without notice to opposite party—If sufficient to sustain appeal—Remedy of creditor.

A right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure. It is a substantive right and is primarily a creature of statute. As such, it can be exercised only by those in whom the power rests either expressly or by necessary implication. Where the Official Receiver in insolvency who fails in a suit to set aside a sale of the insolvent's property for arrears of income-tax, and on appeal, refuses to prefer to a second appeal to the High Court, it is not open to a creditor of the insolvent to prefer an appeal himself. The Official Receiver is not a representative of the creditors and the creditors cannot ignore him or act independently of him and prefer an appeal. The fact that leave had been granted to a creditor to appeal makes no difference when such leave is granted without notice to the opposite party, the grant of leave can only be regarded as having been made without prejudice to the interests of those against whom leave was granted. The proper remedy of the creditor would be to go to the Insolvency Court under S. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and to apply for a reversal of the refusal by the Official Receiver to prefer a second appeal or in the alternative for permission to appeal himself in the name of the Official Receiver. An insolvent has no locus standi under S. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to impeach a sale made by the Official Receiver, he is not a person aggrieved by the act of the receiver. Though S. 68 expressly gives the insolvent a right to apply to the Insolvency Court against any act of the receiver, he can apply only if he is aggrieved by the receiver's act He must have suffered a legal grievance, i. e. there must be a decision pronounced against him which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something, before he can be said to be aggrieved. The word "aggrieved" in S. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act qualifies all the classes of persons previously mentioned in the sentence, and neither a creditor nor the receiver has any right of appeal under the section unless aggrieved. A person can only be aggrieved under the section if he has been wrongfully refused something which he has a right to demand, and inasmuch as neither the creditor nor the receiver has any right to demand the prosecution of the insolvent, they cannot be said to be aggrieved at an order refusing to prosecute the insolvent under S. 69 of the Act and as such have no right of appeal against that order. They must be read as qualifying all the persons who are entitled to appeal, viz, "the debtor, any creditor receiver or any other person." There is no doubt that S. 75 (1) confers the right of appeal only on persons aggrieved by the order of a Subordinate Court. Hence a creditor who has been refused leave to prosecute the insolvent for fraudulent suppression of assets by an order under S. 70 of the Act made by a Subordinate Court is not aggrieved by the order within the meaning of S. 75 (1) of the Act, and hence not entitled to appeal to the District Court. The fact that there is no special request by the Court which has adjudicated to the aiding Court in the matter of a particular claim makes no difference, because there is no necessity for it, when the adjudicating Court has previously requested that Court to aid it and has acknowledged that it had left the aiding Court to decide all matters relating to the property situate within the jurisdiction of the aiding or auxiliary Court. A suit for rent in respect of a Cinema Hall is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The test to be applied to determine whether it is a 'house' is to look at the character of the building and the purpose to which it is or can be adapted; not the name by which it is called. 'House' has a much more restricted meaning than building. It is a structure of a permanent character, structurally severed from other tenements, that is used, or may be used for the habitation of man. It need not actually be used as a dwelling. The proviso to S. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act means that the applicant for setting aside the ex parte decree must at the time of making his application either deposit the decretal amount or give security for the same as directed by the Court upon a previous application made by him in that behalf. The proviso clearly predicates the existence of an application to be made by an applicant. who is not prepared to deposit the decretal amount in cash, to ask for the filing of a security as a substitute therefor. The mandatory nature of the proviso shows that the Court has no jurisdiction to grant any extension of time either for making the deposit or for the filing of the security. The High Court should not ordinarily exercise its discretionary powers in revision under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act if no injustice has been done. The question whether interference should be made or not depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Where the question of limitation raised is even one of law, interference is not justified if the Court is satisfied that far from furthering any ends of justice, it would perpetuate an injustice in interfering with the decree of the lower Court. Under S. 5 of the Public Gambling Act the District Superintendent of Police may arrest without a warrant. In order that an offence may be cognizable offence it is not necessary that every police officer should have the power to arrest without a warrant. The fact that District Superintendent of Police has such power makes it a cognizable offence. The question whether the arrest was valid or not would not affect the question of the guilt or otherwise of the accused, because even if it was illegal, the Court would still have jurisdiction under S. 190, Cr. ——S. 3—Alienation by person declared member of agricultural tribe subsequently—Validity—Sanction—If can be accorded.

An alienation made by a person who is declared to be a member of an agricultural tribe subsequently is neither void nor voidable. The effect of the Alienation of Land Act is merely to alter its character. The alienation in any case can be validated by the sanction of the Collector and such sanction should be accorded where both parties exercised good faith at the time of the alienation and the transaction was completed in the open market with no intention of defrauding the vendor or his tribe and at full value and many years have passed since it was completed. (Garbett, F.C.) FATTA v. BHIKAM SAIN.
20 Lah.L.T. 19.

——S. 3—Order refusing sanction—Right of would-be vendee to appeal.

It is certainly true that in ordinary cases where a member of an agricultural tribe applies for sanction to sell a portion of his land to a non-agriculturist, the non-agriculturist is not a necessary party to the proceedings, but it is not correct to lay down an inflexible rule that in no circumstances may a would-be vendee appeal to a higher authority against the order of the Deputy Commissioner refusing sanction in cases where there is reason to suppose that a vendor is dishonestly endeavouring to use the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act to defraud a bona fide purchaser for value. ——S 3—Sanction of Deputy Commissioner—Right of would be alienee to apply for.

If a person comes forward and states that an alienation of certain land in his favour has been completed in all other essentials except the grant of sanction by the Deputy Commissioner, it should be open to him in such cases to ask for an adjudication on the question whether sanction should or should not be accorded to the particular transaction in question (Alan Mitchell, F.C.) MOHAMMAD DIN v. HAFIZ MEHDI SHAH.

——S 3—Succession of widow to life interest in her husband's estate—Mutation—Sanction of Deputy Commissioner—If necessary.

The succession of a widow to a life-interest in her husband's estate is not a case of permanent alienation. Therefore, the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner for mutation of such succession is not necessary under S. 3 of the Alienation of Land Act. (Mitchell, F.C.) MAHOMED ASLAM KHAN v. IRSHAD BEGAM.
20 Lah.L.T. 104.

——S. 3 (2)—Grant of occupancy rights without Deputy Commissioner's sanction—Validity—Government of India Act (1935), Ss. 298 (1) and (2) and 292.

In view of the fact that S. 292 maintains in force all existing law till repealed or amended; and S. 298 (2) excepts the main features of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act from the general declaration in S. 298 (1), it cannot be said that the general words of that declaration can be taken as overriding and rendering invalid the other provisions of the Alienation of Land Act as in force in 1935 which are not expressly mentioned. Consequently a grant of occupancy rights in agricultural land without the Deputy Commissioner's sanction is invalid under S. 3 (2), Punjab Land Alienation Act. (Skemp, J.) DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, AMRITSAR v. RAI LA RAM. 192 I.C 303=13 R.L. 368=A.I.R. 1941 Lah 27.

——S. 6—Mortgage—Benami transaction—Test.

A transaction is benami if the beneficial interest passes not to soi disant mortgagee but to the non-agriculturis usually a banker or money-lender concerned. Th "beneficial interest" includes certainly the rents and profits of the land, and in most if not in all cases the control of the land. But a transaction between two agriculturists is not benami only because a money lender has derived some benefit from the transaction. If that benefit is short of the full beneficial interest, the transaction can still subsist as a genuine mortgage. In certain circumstances one agriculturist may find a profitable investment in taking over a mortgage which is cripplin another, who has not the capital or resources of his better-equipped fellow agriculturist. The former may conceivably have the same banker as the latter, and that banker may profit by the transaction; but unless substantially the beneficial interest in land passes from the mortgagee to the money-lender or banker, the transaction is not benami. A very important detail of evidence in all such cases is the payment of land revenue. In a completely benami transaction revenue is collected by the lambardar from the money-lender, to whom the beneficial interest has passed; in a genuine transaction the land remains with the mortgagee who pays the land revenue. Where the mortgage is one in form (b) of S. 6 (1) of the Alienation of Land Act, the mere fact that the mortgagee has initiated proceedings of another kind to obtain payment of the debt does not prevent the Deputy Commissioner from taking action under S. 6 (3) of the Act. by two private individuals is a usufructuary mortgage redeemable under S. 7 of the Alienation of Land Act or a lease for a stipulated period which cannot be determined before the expiry of that period, the criterion must be whether the debt or loan is the real basis of the transaction or whether the real basis is the need of the second party to obtain the use and occupation of the land for a particular purpose for an extended period. ——Ss. 7 and 11—Usufructuary mortgage or lease —Test.

In order to determine whether a particular temporary alienation entered into by two private individuals is a usufructuary mortgage or a lease, the criterion must be whether the debt or loan is the real basis of the transaction or whether the real basis is the need of the second party to obtain the use and occupation of the land for a particular purpose for an extended period. Where the so-called lessee has not obtained the use and occupation of the land for any period and the so-called lessors have remained in cultivating occupation of the land binding themselves to pay half batai rent to the so-called lessee every year, the transaction is a usufructuary mortgage. If an alienation made by an agriculturist or by an Official Receiver on his behalf in favour of a non-agriculturist is described in the document in which it is embodied as a usufructuary mortgage in form (a) of S. 6 (1) of the Alienation of Land Act, it can at any time be redeemed under S. 7 (3) of that Act on payment of such proportion of the mortgage debt as the Deputy Commissioner determines to be equitable. If the alienation is a lease, farm or mortgage made by order of a Court under S. 16 of the Act, it would be terminable by the Deputy Commissioner under sub S. (2 A) of that section on payment of an amount which shall bear to the original consideration the same proportion as the unexpired period of transfer bears to the total period for which the transfer has been made But if the alienation is a lease entered into by the agriculturist or by the Official Receiver on his behalf under S. 11 of the Act, the Act contains no provision for its premature termination. ——S. 9—Conversion of mortgage—Delay in application—Effect of.

When a member of an agricultural tribe has mortgaged his land for an unlimited period to a person who is not a member of the same agricultural tribe or group of tribes, no delay however long on the part of the mortgagor in applying to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 9 of the Alienation of Land Act can operate to defeat the right of the mortgagor to have the transaction converted into a mortgage in one of the forms permitted by S. 6 of the Act. M, a member of a notified agricultural tribe, sold some lands to G, a non-agriculturist. Thirteen years later, the Deputy Commissioner passed an order declaring that the aforesaid sale was in contravention of the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and that the alienation would take effect as a usufructuary mortgage for a period of 20 years from the date of the alienation. Two years later G instituted a suit against M for a declaration that he had become owner of the land by adverse possession and that the defendant had no connection with it. The parties compromised the suit whereby G was to be the owner of certain plots of land out of the land in dispute, while the remaining land was to become the property of the defendant without any encumbrance, and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise.

The allotment made by the Collector can, however, be set aside by the Financial Commissioner in exercise of the power of control conferred by S 10 (3) of the Colony Act. This power of control is to be exercised in the course of regular revenue proceedings under Chapter II of the Land Revenue Act which by S. 7 of the Colony Act has been made applicable to the proceedings of Revenue Officers under the Colony Act.

Under the Punjab Debtors' Protection Act, the Collector is only given jurisdiction to decide two things. After the executing Court has attached the land and has decided that it should be temporarily alienated, it is for the Collector to determine the period of alleuation and decide how much of the land, if any, should be exempt for purposes of maintenance. After the case had been remanded on this ground the judgment debtors' objections were accepted and the lease of the land which had been originally granted was set aside When the Court ordered re-sale of the lease the judgment-debtors again objected that the proceedings must be transferred to the Collector under S. 4,

In Land Revenue Rule 36, it is laid down that in regard to various matters including dismissing applications on default a revenue officer will be guided generally by the principles of procedure for the time being in force in Revenue Courts. The procedure in force in Revenue Courts is that laid down in C. P. Code and therefore the provisions of that Code are to be applied by analogy. If, therefore, the Commissioner dismisses for default an appeal arising out of partition proceedings, his order must be regarded as one passed under S. 41 R. 17, C. P. Code and the only course open to the appellant is an application under R. 19 to the appellate Court for the re-admission of the appeal. The Financial Commissioner is ultimately responsible for the correctness of the revenue records, and when there has been an adjudication on the claims of the parties by the High Court, he has a particular responsibility to satisfy himself that the revenue records are brought into conformity with the decision of the High Court. The sanction of the Municipal Committee for a prosecution was given in general terms without mentioning any section but after reciting the facts which the Committee considered to constitute an offence and which were found to constitute an offence under S. 172. These facts were that the petitioner had built on municipal land without permission, that he had been served with a notice to demolish the building within two days and had not complied with it. The complaint prayed that the accused be punished for these acts.

Held, that in the circumstances the Committee sanctioned the prosecution for such offence as might be found proved on the facts stated by them and therefore the provisions of S. 228 were sufficiently complied with. (Almond, J.C.) DOST MOHAMMAD v. HARIPUR EAZARA MUNICIPALITY. 193 I C. 365=

It cannot be argued that as a final decree in the mortgage suit has not yet been passed the suit is still pending within the meaning of S.6 of the Act and, therefore, the provisions of S. 5 of the Act which has further amended S. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act, reducing the maximum rate of interest, apply. This argument overlooks proviso (ii) to sub-S. (1) of S. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act which prohibits the Court from doing anything which affects any decree of a Court. This proviso in the Usurious Loans Act has not been repealed by the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act of 1934 or the Amending Act of 1940. On receipt of an 'intimation' under S. 25 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act to stay proceedings it is open to the Civil Court to consider the nature of the debts mentioned in the application to the Debt Conciliation Board and whether their value exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Board. The question whether the proceedings should or should not be suspended is not a mere question of procedure but also involves substantive rights and therefore the Court is bound to decide immediately whether the intimation received comes from a body which is acting within the jurisdiction conferred on it by statute or is from a body which is not empowered by the statute to send the intimation. If the Court finds that the debts exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Debt Conciliation Board or the nature of the debts is such as to be outside the jurisdiction of the Debt Conciliation Board then the intimation sent by such a Board about the existence of an application concerning such debts is not an intimation in the eye of the law at all and therefore the Civil Court is bound to ignore it on the short ground that no intimation has been received by it. ——S. 72—Misconduct—Risk Note Form H—Meaning of—What Court has to do in such cases—Burden of proof.

"Improper conduct" would be perhaps the simplest and the most non-committal definition of the word 'misconduct' in Risk Note Form H. In such cases the Court has to consider all the facts and circumstances and then arrive at a conclusion as to whether the conduct of the Railway employees was such as to render the railway administration liable in damages upon a reasonable view of the matter. Where packets of yarn delivered to the company for transit are found soiled at the place of destination, if it is established that the railway employees in defiance of the ordinary practice, placed tins of molasses in a wagon which contained the plaintiff's packets or alternatively placed the plaintiff's packets in a wagon which contained tins of molasses, it must be held that they acted recklessly knowing that contamination and damage would be a likely and probable result, and that by their conduct they showed themselves indifferent to such results. It is for the plaintiff to prove all the above which would go to constitute misconduct, and where he fails to elicit from witnesses for the defence, what was the act or what were the acts of the railway employees which resulted in the damage, he cannot get any relief at the hands of the Court. ——S. 77—Suit for compensation against railway—Preferring of claim to railway administration—If part of cause of action.

"Cause of action" means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. Under S. 77 of the Railways Act, a person is not entitled to compensation for loss from the railway unless he has preferred his claim in writing to the agent of the Railway at its head office. Consequently this is a fact which it is necessary to prove in a suit against the railway for compensation and is part of the cause of action for the suit. The defence of grave and sudden provocation is only available to those accused who commit a crime when they have lost all control over themselves because of sudden and grave provocation. A plea of this kind is not open to any man who takes into his head to kill his wife over a very ordinary difference between himself and his wife. If a person suspects his wife of being of loose character and has plenty of time to think over that matter for months and months, it is no defence for him to say that as he had been suspecting his wife for a long time of being faithless to him so he was justified in killing her. Such a case would not come within the definition of a grave and sudden provocation. (Rachhpal Singh, C.J. and J.N. Wazir, J.) FEROZ KHAN v. STATE. 43 P.L.R. J. & K. 1.

——S. 12 (b)—Public service—Meaning—President of Municipal Committee—If employed in public service—His removal, on ground of danger to public peace—If amounts to a declaration of being unfit for employment in public service.

A relationship of employer and employee is necessarily intended by the words used in S. 12 (b) of the Rangoon City Municipal Act which contemplates an employment from which a person is capable of being dismissed. Hence a President of a Municipal Committee in Burma, is not one in 'the public service' in the sense in which the words are used in S. 12 (b) of Municipal Act. When such a person is removed on the ground that his continuance in office is dangerous to public peace, it does not amount either to his being declared unfit for employment in or being dismissed from, the public service, within the meaning of S. 12 (b) of the Rangoon City Municipal Act. (Sharpe, J.) WILCOX v. PATEL. 1941 Rang.L.R. 638.

RANG. CITY MUN. ACT (1922), Sch. I.

——S. 15 (1)—'Corruption'—Meaning—Holding out as Barrister after being disbarred—If amounts to corruption.

The word 'corruption' in S. 15 (1) of the Rangoon City Municipal Act means something different from and additional to bribery, personation, treating and undue influence. It means the doing of an act, with a motive or intention by means of it to produce an effect upon the election, not going so far as bribery, but with the motive of influencing the election. It was held that a person who posed himself as Barrister after being disbarred for misconduct with a view to influence his election as a Muncipal Councillor was guilty of 'corruption' within the meaning of S. 15 (1). (Sharpe, J.) WILCOX v. PATEL. 1941 Rang.L.R. 638.

——S. 15 (1) and (3)—Construction—'Any election'.

The words 'any election' in S. 15 of the Rangoon City Municipal Act are intended to cover both the case of a whole election being invalid and also the case of the election of one of two or more candidates being invalid in a constituency returning two or more candidates. ——S. 194—Applicability — Condition precedent—Existence of arrears—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to decide.

Before S. 194 comes into operation there must be arrears of tax or some fee or money claimable. There is no statute which says that the fulfilment or non-fulfilment of this condition precedent is to be decided by any person so that his decision is to be final and the jurisdiction of the Court is to be ousted. Accordingly the Court has jurisdiction to enquire whether a person is in arrear with payment of a municipal tax, for if he is not, the Land Revenue Acts have no application. ——Sch. I, Ch. III, R. 2 (2) (b)—Qualification to be elected a councillor—Monthly value of building occupied—Test—Occupation of portion not separately assessed—Effect.

The test to be applied to see whether a person is qualified to be elected as a councillor according to R. 2, Cl. (2) (b) of Ch. III of Sch. I to the Rangoon City Municipal Act is not the rent which that person pays for the occupation of a building. The test is the monthly value for purposes of assessment to municipal taxation of the building or portion of the building occupied by the candidate. Hence if a person occupies a portion of a building the value of which portion for purposes of assessment is less than Rs. 100 he is not entitled under the rule to stand for election though the whole building of which he is occupying a portion, may be valued for assessment purposes at very much more than Rs. 100. In the same way if he is occupying several portions, if all their values for purposes of assessment taken together is not less than Rs. 100, he is entitled to stand as a candidate. But though a person pays rent and occupies a portion of a building, the total assessment of which is more than Rs. 100, if the portion occupied by him has not been assigned a separate or special assessment value, then that occupied portion cannot be taken into account to decide the question of the qualification to stand as a councillor. (Sharpe, J.) NARAYANA v. DR. DUGAL. 1941 Rang.L.R. 603.

RANGOON HIGH COURT (APPELLATE SIDE) RULES, Rr. 5 and 57—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Copy of judgment not filed till after expiry of limitation—Effect.

A petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is clearly an application of the kind contemplated by R. 5 the Appellete Side Rules of the Rangoon High Court, for it is an application for the very purpose of calling a decree of the High Court into question. In ascertaining whether it is an order within the meaning of R. 57 the Deputy Registrar, who receives the petition, must see whether it complies with the provisions of R. 5, which requires that certified copies of decree and judgment appealed against should be filed. Where a petition for leave is not so accompanied by a copy of the decree and judgment and which are not filed till after the expiry of limitation, it must be held that the original petition for leave is inchoate and therefore there is no petition before the Court upon which leave could be granted. RANGOON INSOLVENCY ACT (1909), S. 7, Proviso—Scope and applicability of section and proviso—Transfer by insolvent's creditors to wife of insolvent—Wife claiming the property as hers—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to decide question.

S. 7 of the Rangoon Insolvency Act is very wide in its language. It gives the Insolvency Court jurisdiction to decide all questions whatsoever, whether of law or of fact which may arise in any case of insolvency or 'which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case'; that is, the jurisdiction is discretionary. The section is not limited in its scope to matters in which the Official Assignee by the operation of the insolvency law claims a higher title than what the insolvent himself would have had. Where a number of transfers made by the creditors of the insolvent in favour of the wife of the insolvent were sought to be questioned by the Official Assignee and the wife pleaded that the transfer was in respect of her stridhanam and it was found that in fact the consideration moved from the insolvent and the wife was only a nominee, it was held that the question was one of title and not possession and that jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court was not ousted by the proviso to S. 7 of the Act—and that the properties vested in the Official Assignee of the property of the insolvent. Where a Judge sitting in insolvency refuses to permit the further examination of a witness under S. 36 of the Rangoon Insolvency Act, an appeal lies against it under S. 8 (2) (b) of the Act. For this purpose, the various proceedings in an insolvency should be regarded as a series of 'suits' arising out of one failure, and a 'judgment' for this purpose is that which finally determines the subtantive rights of those concerned in any one such 'suit'. ——S. 36—Private examination—Scope of—Discretion under—Interference in appeal—Grounds.

S. 36 of the Rangoon Insolvency Act confers on the Court an extraordinary and inquisitorial, though certainly a necessary power, to be exercised in the interests of the due administration of the insolvent's estate without fear, but not without scrupulous regard to considerations of economy and of fairness to the person examined. The section should not be used for purposes of what is sometimes termed a 'roving commission' or 'fishing enquiry'. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule limiting the scope of a private examination. Though a Court may (not must) think it proper to confine it to questions arising out of the matters stated in the affidavit leading to the summons, there is certainly no rule that only those matters themselves may be put to the witness. The Court ought not to make an order under this section unless there is ground for thinking that the order is likely to be of some use. To justify interference with the discretion of a Judge in such matters, it is not enough to show that the discretion was wrongly exercised but it must be further shown either that it was not exercised at all, or, if exercised, was exercised either unjudicially or on a wrong principle of law or on a wrong appreciation of facts. ——S. 36 (5)—Scope of.

S. 36 (5) of the Rangoon Insolvency Act affords a summary means of enabling the Official Assignee to obtain an order of the Court when the admitted property of the insolvent has been traced to the possession of a third party, for its delivery to him. It has no reference to cases in which there is a dispute as to whether certain property belongs to the insolvent or not. Such a question of title is not within the scope of S. 36 at all. S. 17 (1) of the Registration Act of 1908 should not be construed in its most literal sense so as to involve the conclusion that a document which did not require registration when it was executed and which could not now be registered owing to lapse of time would be shut out of evidence. The more reasonable view is to hold that S. 17 (1), when read along with S. 6 of the Indian General Clauses Act does not destroy the validity or admissibility in evidence of a document which complied with all the necessary formalities as they existed at the time of its execution. In a suit for rent of lands held under a tenure known as Arakandacharam, the feature of which was that in addition to the ordinary rent payable by an ordinary ryot the tenant was also required to pay a quarter of the produce to the landholder, two old pattas of the year 1867, one providing for an annual rent and the other providing for a perpetua lease were

Where a document described as a list of shares of immovable properties equally divided between co-sharers purports to effect a partition of the properties comprised therein between the co-sharers and the allotment thereunder is intended to be final, the document clearly falls within S. 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act requiring registration ; and if unregistered, must be held to be inadmissible in evidence. The mere fact that the parties contemplate the execution of a more comprehensive partition deed later on does not make the document purporting to effect a division any the less operative to create interests in the immovable properties comprised therein so as to justify the view that it does not require registration. In such a case even if a co-sharer happens to be in sole enjoyment of a particular piece of property, he cannot sue in ejectment, basing his title on such a document, if another co-sharer disturbs such enjoyment. He can only bring a suit for partition of all the properties owned in common for joint possession with his co-owners. A possessory title, that is to say, mere previous possession cannot be made the basis of a decree in ejectment against co-owners. Nor can the doctrine of part performance be invoked to support a decree for possession ; the doctrine as embodied in S. 53-A, T. P. Act (as amended in 1929) only entitles a person in possession to invoke the same as a shield to protect such possession, and does not enable a person who has lost possession to sue for recovery of it. The position of a purchaser who has been let into possession by his vendor under an unregistered and consequently inoperative sale-deed after there has first been an oral agreement to sell and after the whole of the consideration has been made good, under the mistaken belief on both sides that the transaction is complete, whereas in fact it has remained incomplete for want of registration of the instrument purporting to effect the transfer, must be regarded as that of a purchaser under a contract for sale which has not yet been completed or rescinded with the consent of both parties and the purchaser cannot claim any title as owner in the property, whether as legal or as equitable owner. The purchaser, however, has a charge on the property for the amount paid by him in advance as purchase-money. The lien is not created by any agreement between the parties, but arises by operation of law, on payment of the purchase-money independently of the sale-deed. Though the unregistered instrument is not admissible to prove transfer of title it can be used in evidence for the purposes of showing that the purchaser entered upon the property under a contract of sale. The unregistered document is also admissible for the purpose of showing that the purchaser obtained a lien by passing of the consideration. ——S. 49, Proviso — Applicability — Partition of joint Hindu family—Nature and scope of—Unregistered document—Admissibility.

Under Hindu Law partition is only a change in the mode of enjoying the joint property coupled with an alteration in status, the joint title being divided into a number of separate ones. No formality is required. A document by which parties had intended to have this division effected may in the result prove ineffective for that purpose. But their common desire to act upon it, and their action in doing so would amount to a confirmation of the original agreement. If that becomes unprovable, such confirmation would itself constitute a fresh and subsequent agreement which would be provable like any other agreement. This is 'a collateral transaction not required to be effected by a registered instrument' within the meaning of S. 49 of the Registration Act. Therefore the unregistered document can be used as material in proof of it. It could be used to corroborate other evidence or facts. It could be used to show the character of the possession and the nature of the title, provided there is other evidence to establish separate possession. accounts—Partnership deed referring to leases of immovable property—Deed not registered—Admissability to prove partnership.

A "collateral transaction" within the meaning of the proviso to S. 49 of the Registration Act is a transaction other than the transaction affecting the immovable property but which is in some way connected with it. A distinction must be drawn between the use of an unregistered document as evidence of a transaction affecting immovable property and the use of such document in evidence; the proviso permits the use in evidence of an unregistered document, though that document affects immovable property, if the purpose of its use is any purpose other than that of creating, declaring, assigning, limiting or extinguishing a right to immovable property. An unregistered deed of partnership which, among others, makes reference to leases of immovable properties, may therefore be admitted and used in evidence in a suit for accounts of the partnership after its dissolution to prove the partnership and profits and losses arising from the same, which is only a collateraal transaction.

Per Weston, J.—A 'collateral transaction" is to be taken as one collateral transaction affecting immovable property by reason of which registration is necessary, rather than one collateral to the document. The proviso speaks not of collateral purpose but of collateral transaction. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) RADHOMAL ALUMAL v. ALLAH BAKHSH KHAN.

——Dedication—Onus.

Where it appears unreasonable on the evidence to doubt that the original right in the land in suit was with the proprietary body, the burden lies heavily on those who assert it, to prove a dedication by user of the whole of the area to the purposes of the shrine and it is beside the point to show that the opposite party's evidence does not exclude the theory of dedication. The case of dedication is not made out merely by evidence of neighbourly or considerate conduct towards a religious institution or by showing that small profits have not been churlishly exacted by the proprietor from persons held in general esteem. A judicial decision though of comparatively recent date, may contain, on its records, evidence of specific instances, which are of sufficient antiquity to be of value in rebutting the presumption raised by a riwaj-i-am. In such a case, the value of the decision arises from the fact not that it is relevant under Ss. 13 and 42 of the Evidence Act as forming in itself a 'transaction by which the custom in question was recognised, etc.,' but that it contains, on its records, a number of specific instances relating to the relevant custom. To ignore such judicial decisions merely on the basis of the riwaj-i-am would add greatly to the perplexities and difficulties of proving a custom. (M. R. Jayakar.) SUBHANI v. NAWAB. I.L.R. SALE OF GOODS—C. I. F. contract—Printed form with typewritten portion—Conflict—Construction—Contract for sale of goods to be delivered in two instalments—Wrongful refusal by buyer to take delivery of first instalment—Right of seller to cancel contract and claim damages.

If the typewritten and printed portions of a contract can be read together effect must, of course, be given to all the provisions, but if the printed portion cannot be reconciled with the typewritten portion the typewritten portion must prevail. In deciding whether there has been a repudiation of the contract regard must be had to the ratio quantitatively which the breach bears to the contract and the degree of probability or improbability that the breach will be repeated. When there is a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered in two equal instalments and the buyer wrongly refuses to take delivery of the first instalment the breach of contract is so extensive that the seller is entitled to cancel the contract and be compensated for any loss suffered by him. ———Tender for goods made of "mild steel"—Stipulation that misdescription would not invalidate tender and sale—Goods delivered found to be of "wrought iron"—Liability for damages.

The defendant Railway Company invited tenders for certain goods which they wanted to dispose of. These goods included "mild steel special wheels". The plaintiff sent a tender for these goods, which was accepted. One of the conditions of tender and sale was to the effect that "the quantities and descriptions of the materials to be purchased are believed to be correct and appropriate." It was also stipulated that "the tender and sale shall not be invalidated and no compensation for misdescription of the whole or any portion of the lots or items shall be admissible because of any divergence from the particulars entered in the schedule". The plaintiff had the option of inspecting the goods before taking delivery but he did not do so. On delivery the plaintiff discovered that the goods were of wrought iron and not of steel,

Held, that although the company believed the goods to be of mild steel they did not give any guarantee and that the conditions of sale made it clear that if it turned out to be a case of misdescription they would not be liable for any damages and that in the circumstances the plaintiff took delivery of the goods at his own risk. SALE OF GOODS ACT (III OF 1930), Ss. 18 and 19—Transfer of shares in company—When complete—Title—When passes—Agreement to transfer and delivery of share certificate—Effect of.

A promissory note was executed for cash paid, and it was agreed that the note should be returned duly cancelled on the promisor getting 20 shares of a company standing in the name of his father-in law, R, transferred to the payee or his nominee. R executed an agreement in which he undertook to transfer the shares to the payee and further stated "I herewith hand over to you duly endorsed the share certificates." This agreement was signed by R and counter-signed by the payee. The actual share certificate contained an endorsement of transfer signed by R, transferring the shares to the payee, but the space for the signature of the transferee and the company's officials was not filled up. Nothing further was done in the matter of the transfer until the company got into difficulties and went into liquidation after some months. In a suit on the promissory note for the amount thereunder,

Held, that it could not be said that the agreement executed by R, by itself would amount to a transfer deed sufficient to cause title to pass; it purported to be an agreement of transfer accompanying the actual instrument of transfer, and if the instrument of transfer had not been completed so far as the transferor could complete it, the agreement by itself would be nothing more than an enforceable agreement to convey, and until the transfer endorsement was signed, the shares would be unascertained goods and they would not be in a deliverable state. But if R signed both the agreement and the transfer endorsement on the share certificate and communicated the fact to the payee who counter-signed the agreement in token of acceptance of the transfer, then it would be the payee's fault that he did not cancel the note and get the formalities of the transfer completed. In such circumstances the title in the shares would pass to the transferee and the payee would be disentitled to sue on the note. (Wadsworth, J.) KUPPIAH CHETTY v. SARASWATHI AMMAL. 1941 Comp. SALE OF GOODS ACT (1930), S. 54.

A contract to sell some liquor out of a big cask containing much larger quantity, the required quantity not being separated or bottled, cannot be held to be a contract of sale of specific goods within the meaning of S. 21 of the Sale of Goods Act. The expression "Specific goods" necessarily means goods capable of being ascertained with certainty—certum est quod certum reddi potest. A sale of some specified quantity of liquor out of a store house or cask would not be capable of ascertainment until it was removed or separated. "Specific goods" would, according to their natural interpretation, mean goods whose delivery can be demanded in specie. A contract of sale of a small quantity of liquor stored in bulk would more appropriately be regarded as a contract for sale of unascertained goods and would fall under S. 23 of the Sale of Goods Act. The ownership will not pass till the quantity ordered by the purchaser is ascertained and appropriated. The bottling of the quantity of liquor ordered would be an act of ascertainment and appropriation. Where the servant of a licensed vendor of liquor goes about canvassing order for liquors and gets orders from customers and thereafter gets the quantities so canvassed measured off at the shop of the vendor and carries the quantities to the respective houses of the customers, it cannot be held that the sale is completed at the houses of buyers upon delivery of liquor and not before. Under S. 23 (2), the servant of the seller can very well be treated as a bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, and delivery to such servant at the place of the licensed vendor would be effective delivery to the buyer himself. It is immaterial whether the price of the liquor is paid at the shop of the vendor or at the house of the buyer, for the completion of the sale does not depend upon payment of the price of the goods sold. The sale must be taken to be completed within the premises of the licensed vendor and the latter cannot therefore be convicted under S. 45 (c) of the Bombay Abkari Act for contravention of a clause in his licence prohibiting sale of liquor at any place except the licensed premises. ——S 54 (4)—Contract rescinded by exercise of right of re sale by seller—Arbitration clause in contract—If wiped out.

The contract for sale of goods gave a right of re sale to the seller in case of default on the part of the buyer and provided that any dispute arising out of the contract whatever its nature shall, unless amicably settled, be referred to arbitration :

Held, that the arbitration clause being an integral part of the contract was also wiped out on the rescission of the contract by the seller by the exercise of his right of re-sale and hence no reference to arbitration could be made in pursuance of the arbitration clause.

Held, further, that the fact that S. 54 (4) kept alive the seller's right to damages arising out of buyer's default did not entitle the seller to enforce that claim by reference to arbitration under the arbitration clause which was no longer subsisting. The only way of enforcing the claim for damages was by way of a suit in a Court of law. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) CHANDU LAL PARMA NAND v. G AHAMS TRADING CO. ——S. 83 (1)—Document of title—Delivery chit—Nature and incidents of.

Apart from any established trade custom a delivery chit or a delivery order is nothing more than a token of authority to receive possession of the goods which it covers. A delivery chit which is part and parcel of a contract on Sukkur Pass Godown delivery terms and which is received without payment and which cannot be effectively used for obtaining delivery without payment of 90 per cent. of the price of the goods is not a document of title within the meaning of S. 2 (4), Sale of Goods Act. The delivery chit does not represent the goods or transfer possession thereof or entitle the holder to receive delivery from the original seller. Irrespective of whether he had received the purchase price of the goods the original seller is entitled to refuse delivery to the holder of the chit in the exercise of his right of lien as unpaid vendor. The delivery chit therefore does not fall within the purview of S. 53 (1), Sale of Goods Act. (Davis, C.J. and Lobo, J.) HUKUMATRAI ARJANDAS v. NANDU VIRUMAL.

SOCIETIES REGISTRATION ACT (XXI OF 1860)—Society registered under—Position of—Status and rights of members—Suit on behalf of Society—Frame of—Right of individual members to maintain action.

The position of a society registered under the Societies Registration Act is more like that of a club or a joint stock company. The position of members of the society is similar to that of the shareholders of a company. In order to redress a wrong done to the society or to recover moneys due to it, the action must prima facie be brought by the Society itself. Where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the society, the Courts will allow the members complaining to bring an action in their own-names. But in such an action the plaintiffs cannot have a larger right to relief than the society itself would have if it were the plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the members or are capable of being confined by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain an action are confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the society. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—Right to—Readiness and willingness of plaintiff to perform contract—Proof required.

In a suit for specific performance it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that he was ready and willing to perform the contract as it actually was and not as he alleges it was. Where, therefore, the plaintiff's case is that he agreed to purchase the property for Rs. 85 and that he was ready and willing to pay this price but the Court has found that the purchase price fixed by the contract was not Rs. 85 but Rs. 130, the claim for specific performance must fail. It may well be that a joint owner of property is still at the date of suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, entitled to the property and would be given possession in a suit properly instituted for that purpose. But nevertheless it is open to one co-owner of property for oust the others and to obtain exclusive possession to himself. The title of others may not be extinguished when this is done, but if that ouster took place more than 6 months before the institution of the suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, then for purposes of S. 9 that ouster would hold good. A suit brought for possession on the ground of forcible dispossession by the defendant, under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not barred by S. 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act when there is neither any allegation or admission of relationship of landlord and tenant. An order or decree passed under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, has not been made the subject of any appeal or review and although the High Court is not precluded from interfering with such orders in revision under S. 115, C. P. Code, such interference should be confined to cases of a very exceptional nature. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) RAJAI SINGH v. SURAJ BALI. 1941 O.W.N. 1237=1941 O.A. 940=1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 1062

S. 19 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply to cases in which specific performance cannot be claimed at all or in which S. 21 of the Act bars specific performance. S. 19 applies to cases in which a contract may be specifically enforced, but in the opinion of the Court for equitable reasons it should not be enforced specifically. In such cases the Court is empowered to grant compensation in lieu of specific performance. It would not apply to cases where the Court cannot under the law grant specific performance. A sold certain article to B in pursuance of a hire purchase agreement between the parties. The article was to remain the property of A until the payment of all the instalments of the purchase price. B was entitled to return the article in good working order at any time provided all amounts due by way of instalments were paid. If any instalments were not paid, A could take possession of the article as well as recover the amount of instalments due, and the costs of putting it in order. The parties subsequently fell out and instead of returning the goods himself as per terms of the agreement B requested A to take back the article. A instead of ignoring the letter as being contrary to the terms of the agreement asked for time to take back the article and after getting it examined refused to take it as it was not found in good working order. A then sued B for the amount of all instalments due up to the date of the suit and for a declaration that B was liable to pay all remaining instalments as set out in the agreement.

Held, that the suit was one for the specific performance of the contract for the sale of goods and since the failure of B to perform his obligations under the hire-purchase agreement for the sale of goods could be adequately compensated in money the contract could not be specifically enforced.

Held, further, that A's letter asking for time to take back the article amounted, so far as the obligation of B to return the goods was concerned, to a novation of the agreement (Roberts, C.J. and Dunkley, J.) ABDUL

——S. 21 (b) and (g)—Applicability—Contract by company to employ person as medical adviser or legal adviser for twelve years—Specific performance—Wrongful termination by employer—Remedy.

It is well settled that a contract of personal service cannot be specifically enforced. Neither affirmative nor negative covenants between an employer and an employee will be enforced at the instance of either. A contract to employ in service as a medical adviser or a legal adviser is a contract for personal service and under S. 21 (b) of the Specific Relief Act is not specifically enforceable. The fact that the employer is a company makes no difference in this respect. If the employer terminates the services of the employee on unreasonable or illegal grounds, the remedy of the aggrieved employee is to sue for damages and not for specific performance. A contract involving the performance of a continuous duty as medical adviser or legal adviser for a period of 12 years also falls under S. 21 (g) of the Specific Relief Act. ——S. 22—Scope of discretion conferred by—Interference by appellate Court—Justification.

S. 22 of the Specific Relief Act lays down that the jurisdiction to decree specific performance is discretionary, and the Court is not bound to grant such relief, merely because it is lawful to do so; but the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary, but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles, and capable of correction by a Court of appeal. The section itself stresses the necessity on the part of the Court to exercise discretion in a sound and reasonable manner and not in an arbitrary fashion. The latter portion of the section itself recognizes that it is competent for an appellate Court to intervene and correct any wrong if the exercise of discretion has been arbitrary. No doubt the powers of Court to make declaratory decrees are limited to those contained in S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and apply only to cases in which the plaintiff, being entitled to any legal character or to any right to any property, may bring a suit against any person denying his title to such character or right. Where a plaintiff asks for an injunction to restrain the building of a house sanctioned by a Municipal Committee, it is incumbent on him under S. 56 (k) of the Specific Relief Act to show that he has some personal interest in the matter. It is only when the act of any corporation or public company which is in excess of the powers is calculated to be injurious to the rights of the property of an individual that he would have the right to protection of the Court by injunction. The plaintiff can succeed only on proof of some special damage or injury occasioned to them by reason of the permission granted by the Municipal Committee. To determine whether an act which is complained of as being a nuisance is strictly so or not is to be judged by the ordinary standards of persons residing in the neighbourhood and the criterion would be the ordinary physical comfort of human existence according to plain, sober and simple notions obtaining amongst people. ——Art. 15—Applicability—Instrument constituting bond—Other portions of instrument falling under other articles of Sch. 1.

Per Verma and Mulla, JJ. (Bajpai and Dar, JJ., dissenting).—Art. 15 applies to that portion of the instrument which does amount to a "bond" and to which that article would otherwise be applicable, even if any portion of the instrument comes within any article of Sch. 1, Stamp Act, other than Art. 15 which excludes only such instruments as are covered by any one of the categories of bonds mentioned in the note appended to that article, namely, Administration bond, Bottomry bond, Customs bond, Indemnity bond, Respondentia bond and Security bond. Therefore, Art. 15 cannot be said to be a residuary article in the sense that it cannot apply so long as the instrument to which it is sought to be applied falls under any one of the other articles in Sch. 1 (Iqbal Ahmad, Ag.C.J., Bajpai, Verma, Mulla and Dar, JJ.)

——Art. 35 (a) and (b)—'Rent reserved'—Meaning of—Whole rent paid in advance in respect of lease for six years—Article applicable.

The only meaning that can be given to the word 'reserved' in Art. 35 (b) of the Stamp Act is, that it is rent agreed to be paid and received as such and not a payment which has already been made and received in consideration of which possession of the property is transferred for the term specified. There is nothing to distinguish a sum represented as having been paid in advance for rent from any other money advanced. Hence Art. 35 (b) applies to cases of leases in which money is advanced as consideration for the lease and where no rent is reserved or where no provision has been made for the payment of rent for the period of the lease, and not Art. 35 (a). If the parties execute a mortgage in the form of a lease for a specified period with the whole rent payable in advance, the proper stamp duty would be that required for a conveyance although it may subsequently be held in proceedings under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act that the document is in fact a mortgage and merely disguised as a lease in an attempt to defeat the provisions of that Act. Under S. 118 and S. 42 et seq. of the Registration Act three conditions have to be satisfied first, the will must be executed; secondly the will must be deposited within 6 months of execution with the Registrar of deeds; thirdly the testator must survive for a period of 12 months after the execution of the will. The Legislature has not contemplated the withdrawal of a will from the custody of the Registrar except upon the terms that the charitable bequests in it are rendered void. The true construction of S. 118 in regard to the requirement of deposit of the will is that the will shall be deposited within six months from its execution and shall remain in deposit until the death of the testator. If there is a withdrawal there can be a redeposit but the requirements of S. 118 as to duration of deposit and time of execution should be once again complied with. ——Ss. 142 and 150—Applicability—Testator having funds in Bank—Gift of sum to son for purchase of money and direction for payment of sum out of amount in bank—If specific or demonstrative.

A testator had three sons, the plaintiff and defendants 2 and 3. He gave the 2nd and 3rd defendants each a large and a small house in Madras and some lands in the mofussil. To the plaintiff he gave specifically a small house in Madras and lands in the mofussil. The will then provided. "....there is a sum of Rs. 14000 in fixed deposit in my name in the Indian Bank, Madras out of that amount I have given Rs. 12,000 to this son (plaintiff), my executors shall as early as possible purchase a house of the value of Rs. 12 000 in Madras." The testator further provided that moneys advanced by him on promissory notes and mortgages as well as the money in the bank should be collected and the amount spent for the purchase of the house for the plaintiff being deducted, the balance should be divided into three shares, each of his three sons being entitled to a share. Later in the will he appointed his three sons as residuary legatees of all his movable and immovable properties. The fixed deposit matured before his death and the testator himself withdrew the amount and purchased a house in Madras for Rs. 10 000.

Held, (1) that the testator clearly intended that the money directed by him to be spent for the purchase of a house should not be divisible amongst his three sons, and that he intended to make a gift of a sum of money in favour of the plaintiff which sum was to be spent on the purchase of a house; (2) that the gift was not a specific gift but was a demonstrative gift, and that the direction that it was to be paid out of a specified fund did not make the gift a specific one. The defendant executed a mortgage in favour of a Hindu. The period of redemption was 12 years, but was subject to an acceleration clause which enabled the mortgagee to realise the security by filing a suit if interest for 6 consecutive months remained in arrears. The defendant paid interest regularly until the death of the mortgagee who died intestate but thereafter wrote to the plaintiff, the widow and sole heir of the mortgagee, asking her to receive payment of interest on production of succession certificate. The widow refused to obtain the certificate, and thereafter filed a suit to enforce the mortgage claiming that the acceleration clause had become operative.

Held, that the defendant mortgagor, having regard to S. 59-A of the T. P. Act was bound to pay to the plaintiff who derived title from the mortgagee the interest as it fell due, that the production of a succession certificate by the plaintiff was not obligatory, and that by reason of the defendant's failure to pay the interest the acceleration clause became operative and entitled the plaintiff to institute proceedings to bring the property to sale. ——S. 271—Discretion of High Court to refuse application—Right to observe comity of Courts—Discretion once exercised—Effect of.

Per Derbyshire, C.J —The High Court on its original side has at least the discretion given by S. 271 of the Succession Act to the Judge of a District to refuse an application for grant of probate of a will when the deceased testator was not living within its jurisdiction. It has a right to observe a comity of Courts and avoid, wherever it is possible to avoid, any real. and even any apparent conflict of jurisdiction between two equally competent tribunals. The Court is not deprived of its discretion under the section because it exercised it on an earlier occasion so as to permit the proceedings to go on. That discretion is exercisable by the Court whenever the Court is placed in the position of having to decide what order is to be made upon the application for probate. Where the Court granting the probate is not a High Court, the grant is not effective with respect to assets beyond the limits of the Province in which the Court is situated; but this only means that with regard to other assets the grantee must apply to the appropriate Court for a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed, to which he has an indisputable right. ——S. 283 (1) (c)—Probate in common form—Right to object to grant—"Interest"—Creditor— Right to object to grant.

Whether or not a person can oppose the grant of probate depends entirely upon whether he has or has not an interest in the estate of the deceased. A creditor who has attached a portion of the estate might possibly be a person who has an interest in the estate, but a mere creditor who has not even obtained a decree can hardly be said to be have an interest in the estate and such a creditor has no right to object to the grant of probate in common form.

Fazl Ali, J.: The interest which entitles a person to object to the grant of probate must be an interest in the estate and not merely an interest in the result of the probate proceedings or "interest" in any remote sense of the term. SUCCESSION ACT (1925), S. 372.

No doubt where an application is substantially defective no succession certificate should be granted on such an application. But where the petition is defective in that the name of the person whose estate is claimed is not correctly given but the petitioner takes up the correct position by putting in another petition before hearing, the petition should be allowed to be amended and not dismissed by reason of such defect. ——S. 373—Scope of enquiry.

The Court in granting a succession certificate has only to make a prima facie enquiry as to whether the debts mentioned in the schedule did or did not belong to the deceased. The petitioner certainly can demand an enquiry of that sort and the Court will be bound in that case to investigate the point and take such evidence as it considers proper for the purpose of satisfying itself as to whether the debts and securities prima facie belonged to the deceased or not. The grant of a certificate does not confer any title upon the grantee as an heir to the deceased; it only invests him or her with the requisite authority to collect debts due to the deceased and allows the debtors to make payments without any risk. If a certificate is granted to two or more persons jointly, the authority vested in them can be exercised by all of them together and if one of them dies, the remaining certificate holders cannot exercise the powers which could only be exercised by them along with the deceased, and as there is no estate vested in any of the grantees no question of survivorship at all arises. That is, on the death of one of them the certificate becomes wholly in operative. And before a fresh certificate is granted the existing certificate should be formally revoked. In a suit for partition by persons in joint possession of the land, the value for the purpose of jurisdiction is the actual market value of the property in suit, although court-fee is payable under Art. 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act (as amended in Madras). Hence where the value of the plaintiffs' share will be not less than Rs. 10,000, the suit has to be filed in a Subordinate Judge's Court as a District Munsiff's Court has no jurisdiction to entertain it. S. 4 of the Suits Valuation Act gives no room for the idea of a notional value. Where the sole question for decision is whether the title as trustee of certain villages vests in the public or in private persons, that is whether they are the subject of public trust or a private trust, the title to these villages is affected by the relief sought and therefore the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction is the market value of the property itself. ——S. 8—Applicability—Suit for restitution of conjugal right—Mode of valuation—Forum.

S. 8 does not apply to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. In such a suit therefore the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction are not necessarily the same. In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the plaintiff is entitled for the purposes of jurisdiction to put any value he likes on the relief sought and thus determine the Court in which the suit is to be instituted, provided that the valuation is made bona fide and not in order to effect an improper purpose. A Court, other than the District Court, or the Sub-divisional Court or the Assistant District Court, the jurisdiction of which has been extended by Government to suits or original proceedings without restriction as regards the value, has jurisdiction to hear and determine a suit for restitution of conjugal rights provided the valuation placed upon the suit by the plaintiff in his plaint gives the Court jurisdiction. ——S. 11—Scope and effect of—Suit—Under-valuation—Objection not raised in trial Court or in appellate Court—Plea in execution that decree is without jurisdiction—If open.

Where the defendant in a suit does not raise any objection to the valuation on the ground of gross under-valuation, though it is open to him, and fails to raise the objection in the appellate Court also which confirms the decree, it is not open to him in execution proceedings to raise that objection and plead that the decree under execution is a nullity on the ground that the same was without jurisdiction. A Court executing a decree may, no doubt, come to the conclusion that the decree is a nullity. But that can be only in cases where the want of jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree is apparent on the face of the record. When that is not the case, the executing Court cannot hold the decree to be without jurisdiction and therefore a nullity on that ground. S. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is a complete answer to the plea of want of jurisdiction when the defendant had not thought fit to raise the objection either in the trial Court or in the appellate Court, but only seeks to raise it in execution proceedings. He cannot be permitted to plead that the decree originally obtained in the suit was a nullity on the ground of want of jurisdiction arising from under-valuation. S. 11 of the Suits valuation Act is limited to cases where by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal in the Court of first instance or the lower appellate Court, that Court had no jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal but has exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto. It has no application where there has been no under-valuation or over-valuation, but the nature of the suit was wrongly understood as when an unclassed suit was wrongly assumed to be a suit of small cause nature. ——S. 11 (2) and (3)—Scope and effect—Appellate Court—Duty of—Appeal from decree in suit which Court had no jurisdiction to try—Procedure to be followed by appellate Court

Where on an appeal from a decree, the appellate Court finds that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, the proper course is not to summarily dispose of the matter by setting aside the decree and remanding the suit for return of the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. Even in cases where the point as to under-valuation is properly taken, the Court can deal with the appeal provided S. 11 (2) of the Suits Valuation Act is complied with. But it cannot act under S. 11 (2) if it is satisfied that the question of under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits. If the appellate Court does not address itself to this question, its decision setting aside the trial Court's decree and remanding the suit is wrong and must be set aside. The appellate Court must consider the provisions of S. 11 (2) and (3) of the Suits Valuation Act and then proceed to dispose of the appeal. In appeals under S. 7 (2) of the Tea Control Act, it is not necessary for the appellant to make the Central Government or the Tea Licensing Committee a party to the appeal. The Court may, however, issue notice to the Committee to appear and support its decision, or the Committee may apply to be permitted to be heard, and if necessary to lead evidence to show that its order was correct. Where the crop basis which was allotted to a tea estate was not fixed after due investigation by the committee appointed under the Tea Licensing Resolution prior to the coming into operation of the Tea Control Act of 1933, the committee appointed under the Act has power to hold an investigation as to the acreage of tea plantation for the purpose of recalculating the crop basis of the tea estate. ——Ss. 20 and 29—Committee appointed prior to Act under Tea Licensing Resolution—Power to call for returns and inspect tea estates.

A committee appointed under the Tea Licensing Resolution prior to the coming into operation of the Tea Control Act of 1933, was not bound to accept without question the figures submitted by the tea estates concerned as a basis for calculating the export quotas to which they were entitled. The committee were entrusted with certain statutory duties in connection with the allotment and determination of export quotas. If they had considered it necessary to call for further returns it would clearly have been their duty to do so and it would also have been open to them to test the accuracy of such returns by such legal means as might have been available to them, for example, by inspection of the tea estate with the consent of the owner. Under the Tea Control Act of 1933, inspections might be held not only for the purpose of controlling the extension of tea cultivation, but also for the purpose of enabling the committee to perform their duties connected with the control of the export of tea. It was not intended by the Legislature that the words of S. 29 (2) of the Act should be taken to be limited by the head-note of the chapter. (Edgley, J.) F. Where it is found that a steamer carrying passengers collided with a submerged snag, and that the collision was not due to the negligence of the owner or the master of the vessel, it cannot be held that either the owner or the master of the ship is guilty of negligence so as to render them liable for damages for the death of a passenger on board the vessel. These snags may appear suddenly and no shipping company can be held liable merely on the ground that it was not aware of the existence of such an obstacle. When the existence of the snag in a navigable and proper channel is unknown, unexpected collision with it is not an act of negligence. Such a collision is in the nature of an act of God or inevitable accident. Even if there has been overcrowding or overloading on the vessel, there would be no liability. When such overcrowding or overloading had nothing to do with the vessel striking the submerged snag. No damages can be awarded in the absence of proof of negligence or breach of statutory duty. Such a statement is defamatory and constitutes a libel, as the imputation has a tendency to prejudice the woman concerned in the way of her profession or calling. ———Defamation—Libel—Right of individuals and journalists to hold and express views on subjects—Limits to—Publication of statement about another casting reflection calculated to disparage or injure—If defamation—Suit for damages—Proof of falsity of statement or malice—Necessity.

Any person, whether he is a private individual or a public journalist, has a right to hold any views he pleases on a subject and to express the same. It is immaterial whether the opinion or the comment is correct or not correct, whether it is just or unjust, or whether it is couched in language which may not err on the side of moderation. What is material and important is that the comment must not go beyond the limits of what the law calls "fair." A statement which being published of another in the way of that person's lawful trade business, profession, calling or office, conveys a reflection on that person calculated to disparage or injure that person therein, is a defamatory statement even though it be not calculated to hold that person up to hatred, contempt or ridicule. In a suit for damages for defamation in respect of such a statement it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the words are false. If the words are defamatory they are presumed to be false, and it is for the defendant, if he seeks to justify them, to prove that they are substantially true. Nor is it necessary for the plaintiff to prove any malice on the part of the defendant. It is only for the purpose of rebutting the defence of qualified privilege that it becomes necessary to prove express malice in the sense of improper motive on the part of the defendant. The fact that an accused in a criminal case of defamation (libel) tenders an unqualified apology which is accepted, leading to the withdrawal of the criminal proceeding, does not bar a subsequent civil suit for damages for libel. ——— Defamation—Privilege — Publication in newspaper—Extent of privilege—Unfair comments or imputations upon person's character or in respect of his profession or calling—If privileged—Test—Burden of proof.

Newspapers are subject to the same rules as other critics and have no special right or privilege, and in spite of the latitude allowed to them, it does not mean that they have any special right to make unfair comments or to make imputations upon the character of a person or imputations upon or in respect of a person's profession or calling. The range of a journalist's criticism or comments is as wide as, and no wider than, that of any other subject. Though it may be said to be true in one sense that newspapers owe a duty to their readers to publish any and every item of news that may interest them, that is not, however, such a duty as makes every communication in the paper relating to a matter of public interest a privileged one. The defendant has to show that what he communicated was relevant or pertinent to the privileged occasion. ———Malicious prosecution—Cause of action—Pleader prosecuted by Municipal Corporation for practising without licence—On production of licence pleader discharged—Suit for damages.

There are three sorts of damage, any one of which is sufficient to support an action for malicious prosecution. First, damage to a man's fame, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous. Secondly, damage to his person, as where a man is put in danger of life, limb or liberty. Thirdly, damage to his property, as where he is forced to expend money in necessary 'charges to acquit himself of the crime of which he is accused.' It is no answer to the plaintiff's claim that the crime of which he was accused is punishable with fine only. A pleader was prosecuted by the Municipal Corporation for practising without licence in spite of his having paid the requisite licence fee. On production of the licence however he was discharged. In a suit for malicious prosecution by the plaintiff,

Held, that there was no danger to life, limb or liberty of the plaintiff because the offence with which he was charged was punishable with fine only. Nor could the matter of which the plaintiff was accused be described as scandalous. Nor could the charges incurred by the plaintiff in engaging a pleader and paying him a fee, be justified inasmuch as the plaintiff himself was a

The latter ordered an inquiry by the police who subsequently made a report that the complaint was false. The plaintiff was not even summoned. The Magistrate thereupon declined to take any further action, and the proceedings were dropped. In a suit by plaintiff for damages for malicious prosecution, Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not "prosecuted," and he could not therefore bring an action for damages for malicious prosecution; (2) that the suit was not maintainable even as a claim for damages for bringing a false charge apart from either malicious prosecution or defamation; (3) that statements made in a complaint to a Magistrate or even to a police officer which could only be made with a view to their being repeated on oath before the Magistrate must be held to be absolutely privileged; (4) that even if the allegations made by the defendant to the village Magistrate be held to be defamatory since they were made on an occasion which was found to be absolutely privileged, no claim for damages for defamation would lie. ———Nuisance—Municipality discharging sewage water into storm water channel—Injunction, if can be granted.

There was an old storm water channel in certain area which was constructed before that area became thickly populated. With the increase of population, the need for sanitation grew more acute and the municipality adopted the simple expedient of discharging sewage water into the old storm water channel. An individual in the locality claimed that this led to two distinct nuisances, from which he in particular was a sufferer. During the rainy season the water overflew into his house, with unpleasant results. At other times the water in channel became stagnant and gave off a stench so offensive that his house was practically uninhabitable, He therefore sought an injunction to restrain the municipality from discharging the sewage water into this channel, or in the alternative, to compel it either to convert the channel into a suitable drain or to have proper drainage laid down elsewhere.

Held, that the committee could not be compelled to make satisfactory drainage arrangements; but if it undertook the duty of making such arrangements, it could be restrained from making arrangements which were negligent or dangerous to health or even interfered with the ordinary comfort of an individual. It is not the standard of a petulant, cynical, hypersensitive or fastidious person that would furnish a guide but that of a person who expects to enjoy the ordinary comforts of a decent and healthy life in the local area where he resides. ——Wrongful attachment—Damages—Liability for—Essentials to be proved—Execution of decree—Application for attachment—Order by Court for arrest—Warrant of attachment wrongly issued by Court—Attachment and locking up of premises by amin—Claim for damages against decree-holder—Sustainability—Ratification.

The defendant held a decree against the plaintiff and applied for execution of the decree by attachment of the movable properties of the plaintiff. The execution petition was put up for orders before the Judge in Chambers, and an order was made for arrest of the plaintiff in chambers where neither the defendant nor his Counsel was present. But through the mistake of the Court officials, a warrant of attachment was issued and the amin who went to execute it took the defendant (decree-holder) with him and proceeded to a printing press of the plaintiff. As it was late in the day and nothing could be done, the amin locked up the press and sealed it with the seal of the defendant and went away. The press remained locked for three or four days and was opened by orders of Court only after the plaintiff (judgment-debtor) deposited the decree amount in Court. The plaintiff then brought a suit for damages against the defendant, alleging that the defendant was responsible for malicious prosecution, and trespass on property and also for abuse of process of Court.

Held, that the plaintiff, in order to succeed, should prove that in spite of the order for arrest, or after knowing that the order was only for arrest, the defendant deliberately got a warrant of attachment by misleading or influencing the officers responsible for issuing the warrant and that he instigated the amin to lock up the press; (2) that on the evidence on record, the defendant was neither responsible for the wrong issue of a warrant of attachment instead of a warrant of arrest nor in any way instrumental in getting the press locked; (3) that it was clear from the evidence that the defendant neither instigated the amin to lock the press nor was any way responsible for that act on the part of the amin; (4) that the error was wholly and entirely on the part of the officers of the Court for which the defendant was not responsible, (5) that there could be no question of ratification by the defendant of the act of the amin; and (6) that therefore the defendant could not be held liable for damages. Appellant sold some properties to the respondents 2 and 3. The sale was set aside at the instance of two persons claiming to be the real owners of the property. The respondents 2 and 3 then assigned their right to recover the purchase money from the appellant to the 1st respondent (plaintiff). The latter filed a suit for recovery of the purchase money from the appellant who pleaded S. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act in bar of the claim.

Held that the claim was a claim to recover a precise sum which the appellant was bound to repay on the setting aside of the sale, as there must be implied a contract to repay the purchase money as between the vendor and vendee. A right to claim enforcement of this contract cannot be said to be a bare right to sue falling under S. 6 (e), T. P. Act, but is an actionable claim to which S. 130, T. P. Act, would apply. A transferee claiming under a transfer before 1929, cannot by reason of the amendment of the T. P. Act, in 1929, be required to do more than he was required to do by the law as it stood when the property was transferred to him. Nor can a mere omission to make inquiries be regarded as sufficient to constitute "notice" within the meaning of Ss. 3 and 39, T. P. Act. The abstention from inquiry must be designed, and due to a desire to avoid an inquiry which would lead one to ultimate knowledge before the omission to make inquiry can be said to constitute constructive notice. The appellant who was the widow of a Hindu coparcener sued on 18—10—1926, her husband's coparcener for maintenance, her husband having died some time before 1926. She got a decree under which certain properties were charged for her maintenance. On 25—7—1926, these properties were mortgaged by the surviving coparcener to the respondent who in 1931 filed a suit to enforce the mortgage, claiming priority over the maintenance charge. It was found that the mortgage was a genuine transaction and was for consideration and that it was for a necessary purpose binding on the joint family. It was not suggested that the mortgage was created in order to defeat the appellant. It was, however, contended that since the respondent did not make any inquiry as to whether a widow had a claim on the properties, he should be postponed after the appellant.

Held, that there was no wilful abstention or gross negligance on the part of the respondent, that the omission on his part to make inquiries could not be regarded as sufficient to constitute constructive notice and the appellant therefore was not entitled to priority over the respondent.

——S. 53—Action, if falls under—Test.

The primary object of an action under S. 53 of the T. P. Act is to make the assets of the transferor available o the general body of creditors. If it would, then the action would in substance be an action under S. 53 and would have to be instituted by, or on behalf of all the creditors. If it would not, then the action cannot be regarded as one under that section. The proper test to apply when a question of this nature is raised is to see whether if the plaintiff succeeds in the action, the property claimed in the action would be available to the general body of creditors. Where there was no indication in the plaint or elsewhere that the suit was filed on behalf of or for the benefit of other creditors but on the other hand there was every indication in the averments of the plaint, that the plaintiff wanted only to vindicate his personal and individual rights, and not the rights of other creditors, it was held that the suit was not one under S. 53 of the T. The inclusion of a debt in a document of transfer, which would otherwise not be within S. 53, T. P. Where the plaintiff seeks to recover possession of property on the basis of a trust deed, it is open to the defendant to plead by way of defence that the plaintiff should not be allowed to recover on the basis of the said document as it was a fraudulent one intended to defeat the rights of creditors among whom the defendant is one. Where a transaction is intended to defeat and delay creditors, the mere fact that a portion of the consideration was paid is no ground for not setting aside the transaction entirely. When a debtor with a view to defeat or delay his creditors colludes with one of his creditors and creates a mortgage in his favour for a consideration which is partly fictitious and partly made up of a true money debt due to the creditor, on the finding that the transaction, as a whole, was a collusive transaction intended to defeat and delay creditors, the transaction should be set aside as a whole and the creditor who is a party to the fraud should not be allowed the protection of the transaction to the extent of his prior debt discharged thereby. There is no distinction in this respect between fraudulent transfers by way of mortgage and fraudulent transfers by way of sale. (Wadsworth, J.) NARASIMHAMURTHI v MAHARAJA OF PITTAPUR.

——S. 53—Transfer partly good—Transfer in part for consideration but vitiated by fraud—Validity.

Where part of the consideration for a mortgage executed in favour of a creditor is proved to be fictitious and this fictitious part of the consideration is put in the bond in order to protect the mortgagor's property from his other creditors, it is a transfer made to defeat and delay creditors and by virtue of S. 53 of the T. P. Act it becomes voidable in toto, and cannot be enforced partially in respect of the consideration which was actually paid. Under the section mere proof of consideration by the mortgagee is not enough. The section postulates two things:—Consideration and good faith, and there cannot be any good faith when the mortgagee knows that part of the consideration is fictitious and when he assists the mortgagor in his device to defeat and delay his creditors. ——S. 53—'Transfer'—What is included in—Fraudulent transfer—Test—Onus.

The word 'transfer' used in S. 53, T. P. Act, is comprehensive enough to embrace within its purview all kinds of transfers, whether with consideration or without consideration, but applies to both kinds of transfers. The crucial question, however, under the section is one of determining the intention and motive underlying the transfer. The mere fact that a transfer is executed without consideration, as in the case of a gift, will not necessarily lead to an inference that the transfer was made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor. Each case must be examined on its own merits and it must be found upon a consideration of the entire circumstances surrounding the execution of the deed of transfer, whether it was brought about with a fraudulent intent or otherwise. Under the general law the burden of proving that a transfer is fraudulent under S. 53, T. P. Act, lies on the creditors. ——S. 53-A—Applicability—Contract not complete or invalid.

The contract contemplated by S. 53-A of the T. P. Act is a completed contract and a valid contract. (Sen, J.) BHARAT CHANDRA v. MOHAMMAD RAMJAN.

——S. 53-A—Applicability—Contract not specifically enforceable.

It is not correct to state that if a contract cannot be specifically enforced, S. 53-A of the T. P. Act will have no application. The object of this section is to protect persons in cases where there is a contract which cannot be proved in evidence or the specific performance of which is barred. (Sen, J.) BHARAT CHANDRA v. MOHAMMAD RAMJAN. 45 C.W.N. 489.

——S. 53-A—Applicability—Contract valid in part.

S. 53-A of the T. P. Act contemplates reliance upon the entire contract. It does not contemplate the splitting up of a contract into different parts. If, therefore, a contract is partly valid and partly invalid, the section cannot be availed of so far as the valid part of the contract is concerned. In order to avail oneself of the benefit of the provisions of S. 53-A of the T. P. Act, it must be shown that the possession refers unequivocally to the contract. Where a person is already in possession as lessee and continues in possession after the contract for sale, it does not necessarily follow that he continues in possession in part performance of the contract. He must show either from the contract itself or from some other evidence that the continuance of his possession was in reference to or pursuant to the contract for sale. ——S. 53-A—Applicability — Writing signed by transferor or on his behalf—Necessity—"Signed on his behalf"—Meaning of.

The first requirement mentioned in S. 53-A, T.P. Act, as a condition for the applicability of the section is that there should be a writing signed by the transferor or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The words "signed on his behalf" in the section mean signed by a person who has authority to bind or represent the transferor. The third clause of S. 53-A, T.P. Act, enacts a condition that the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract. It is obvious that it is primarily intended for the benefit of the transferee, and when the section speaks of the performance of his part or willingness to perform his part, it means complete performance or complete willingness to perform so far as he is concerned. It is not a sufficient compliance with this condition that the transferee has performed his part of the contract to some extent. ——S. 53-A—Scope—If can be availed of by transferor for founding suit for damages for breach of contract.

S. 53-A, T. P. Act, according to its terms, debars a transferor from exercising rights which he would have apart from the agreement. Although there is an exception to this disablement in the words "other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract," it is clear that the transferor cannot in any case derive any rights from the section which are inconsistent with the conditions subject to which the section comes into operation. Since it is a condition precedent that the transferee shall have performed his part of the contract or should be willing to perform his part of the contract at the time when the section is sought to be made use of, which is the material time, it necessarily follows that a suit by the transferor for damages for breach of contract can never be founded upon S. 53-A. The vendor of property subject to a mortgage left a part of the purchase price with the vendee who undertook to clear off the mortgage by paying the same to the mortgagee. Subsequently a pre emption suit in respect of the property sold was decreed and the pre-emptor deposited the amount mentioned in the pre-emption decree but subsequently withdrew part thereof for payment to the mortgagee but neither the vendee nor the pre-emptor or his transferee with notice of non payment paid anything to the mortgagee. It was contended that title passed to the pre-emptor on his depositing in Court the amount as determined in the decree and that he was under no further liability to discharge any obligation which the vendee might have undertaken in the sale-deed or which might have been imposed upon him by operation of law and the unpaid vendor's lien was extinguished by the deposit of decretal amount.

Held, that on the facts as proved in the case the 'lien' was not extinguished by the deposit of the pre-emption money in Court and that the vendor had a subsisting charge for the unpaid amount on the property which he was entitled to enforce both against the pre-emptor as well as his transferee with notice of non payment. T. P. ACT (1882), S. 58.

B, who had entered into a contract to purchase certain property from A, cancelled the contract but was allowed to remain in possession of the property until the purchase price which he had paid was repaid to him. In a suit for possession by C, who had purchased the property subsequently from A, B pleaded the novation of the contract under which he was allowed to remain in possession till payment but failed to prove the novation. Held, that it was not open to the High Court in appeal to entertain this question of statutory charge under S. 55 (6) (b) as it involved the issues of fact which had not been raised or considered, viz., (1) whether B had improperly declined to accept delivery and (2) whether C had notice of payment by B to A.

Held further, that B's possession was not sufficient notice within the meaning of S. 55 (6) (b) as possession by a tenant is not notice of the lessor's title, unless the transferee had in fact learnt that the rents were paid to him. Ss. 56 and 81 of the Act do not apply to N.-W. F. Province but their principles are applicable as principles of equity, justice and good conscience. Equity demands that the mortgagee should not be permitted to unequally distribute the mortgage money on two different properties and to release one lightly and burden the other more than it normally should be. A pro rata share should be recovered from the property which has been proceeded against if the mortgagee has released another property which was also liable for the security. A borrowed a sum from B and mortgaged certain properties by way of security. A charge was created afterwards in favour of C by a consent decree. Subsequently B made a further advance to A and this sum was secured by an instrument described as a further charge. The deed provided that all the hereditaments comprised in the first mortgage would be security for the payment of sum advanced under first mortgage as well as the further advance. The provision in the first mortgage deed transferring the property to the mortgagee by way of security was also incorporated in the deed of further charge.

——S. 58— Sale or mortgage— Determination — Reference to surrounding circumstances—Permissibility —Tests to be applied.

The question whether a sale deed and a contemporaneous agreement record an out and out sale with a contract or condition for repurchase or record a transaction of mortgage, is in the first instance one of construction of the deeds in question. But a number of surrounding circumstances under which the transaction came into existence, can be taken into consideration by Court. The crucial test, in such cases, is the intention of the parties. It is not satisfactory to apply the test whether the relationship of debtor and creditor is created by the document. Where the deed emphasises the transferee being a representative of the vendor, it would seem to suggest that the transferee is regarded as being or being expected to be only a temporary transferee. Where parties areMahomedans there is a certain amount of presumption in favour of the transaction being a mortgage concealed under the cloak of a sale deed with a condition for repurchase. Where a period of 15 years is fixed for repurchase at the same price the probabilities are in favour of mortgage rather than sale. (Yorke and Bennett, JJ.) MEHDI HUSAIN v. MOHAMMAD JAWAD.

Where in a usufructuary mortgage it is provided that if the mortgagee did not obtain possession or if he lost possession he could recover his money and interest by sale of the mortgaged or any other property of the mortgagor, it amounts to an implied agreement that the mortgagor will give possession to the mortgagee and whether the deed is considered an usufructuary or an anomalous mortgage, there is no reason why effect should not be given to the agreement. The mortgage is certainly not a simple mortgage, though it may be considered a combination of a simple and an usufructuary mortgage. It is open in either case to the mortgagee to sue either for possession or for the mortgage money. (Bennett, J.C.) RAM PADARATH SINGH v. NIMAR SINGH.

A deed styled as rehan recited that the mortgagor executant bound himself to deliver possession of the property in Jeth 1341 F authorized the mortgagee to retain possession till Jeth 1350 F, when the executant bound himself to pay the money, which was spoken of as rehan money. It further provided that the mortgagee would be entitled to retain possession until payment of the money advanced. The deed was executed on 6—6—1933, but possession was never delivered to the mortgagee and the latter on 6—6—1936, brought a suit for recovery of possession. It was pleaded that there was no hypothecation clause in the deed as is commonly found in similar deeds, that the plaintiff was not a usufructuary mortgagee and no decree for possession could therefore be passed.

Held, (1) that the deed was a usufructuary mortgage deed coming under S 58 (d) of the T. P. A mortgage bond after reciting that the mortgagor had on taking Rs. 435 by way of rehan money paying no interest let out in rehan and pledged the whole and entire land owned and possessed by him, etc., provided inter alia, "when the term of this deed will expire in the month of Bhado 1338 Fasli, then at that time the executant on paying the entire mortgage-money will get back the deed and rehan will be redeemed. Held, that there was no covenant by the mortgagor to repay the mortgage money, as nowhere did the mortgagor bind himself to pay the money at the end of Bhado 1338 or at any other time; there was merely a provision that the bond may be redeemed at the end of Bhado 1338; but if it was not, the term of the bond was extended. A power of sale must include all steps which are necessary to be taken in that connection and it necessarily includes a power to postpone the sale. In order to make a power bad, there must be words in S. 69 which render the whole power invalid in law. If the mortgagor contends that a clause in a mortgage deed conferring a power of sale restricts in any way the power of the parties to enter into a contract, the burden is on him to show that the words of S. 69, T. P. Act, prevent an agreement between the parties as embodied in the mortgage. A power to sell is a power to sell either now or at a later date; and a clause which gives power to postpone the sale is not against the words of S. 69, T. P. Act, and is not illegal. Nor is a power 'to buy in or rescind or vary any contract of sale" bad and against the words of S. 69. Such a clause containing the words buy in' cannot be taken as giving the mortgagee a right to buy the property for himself and would not violate S. 69 in any manner. A lessee from a jenmi executed a usufructuary mortgage of his interest under which the mortgagee was to remain in possession enjoy the profits in lieu of interest and to pay the rent due to the lessor (jenmi). At the end of three years the mortgagor was to get back possession on payment of the principal amount only. The mortgagee did not pay the rent due to the lessor for several years and the latter sued both the mortgagor and the mortgagee for possession of the property leased and for arrears of rent and obtained a decree. He, however, allowed the decree to become barred by limitation and lost all his right to the property and to the arrears of rent by his inaction. The mortgagor sued the mortgagee for redemption and claimed an account from the mortgagee of the amount which the latter ought to have paid to the lessor-jenmi as arrears of rent out of the receipts from the mortgaged property.

Held, that the effect of the document was to take the mortgage entirely out of the purview of S. 76 (h), T. P. Act, and deprived the mortgagor of the benefit of that clause, and as the lessor did not insist on the payment of the rent, his inaction enured to the benefit of the mortgagee, not of the mortgagor. Where two properties have been mortgaged to a person who has obtained a decree on the mortgage, and one of them has been subsequently mortgaged to another, the latter would come within S. 81, T. P. Act and can claim a right to marshal provided the exercise of such right is not to the prejudice of the prior mortgagee or of any other person having interest in any of the properties. But where the property is found not to be worth anything like the amount due under the mortgage, the subsequent mortgagee has no right of marshalling, because to compel the prior mortgagee to sell that property first would be prejudicial to him. T.P ACT (1882), S. 82.

Principle—Value of property to be taken—Material date for considering—S. 60.

Although S. 82, T. P. Act, may not in terms apply to the case of a suit for sale by a mortgagee who has purchased the equity of redemption of a portion of a mortgaged property against the mortgagor or any other person who may be interested in the other portion of the mortgaged property, the section lays down a general rule, and the last clause of S. 60, T. P. Act, is an instance of the application of the rule to a mortgagee who happens to acquire a share of the equity of redemption If a mortgagee happens to purchase a portion of the mortgaged property, there would be a merger and extinction of liability under the mortgage to that extent, and in the absence of any other circumstances showing that it is for the benefit of the mortgagee to keep his mortgagee's rights alive or that he declares his intention either expressly or by necessary implication that he would keep his subsequently acquired rights distinct from his prior rights which he held as a mortgagee, it must be held that his right to recover his money under the mortgage, is, on his purchasing the equity of redemption in a portion of the property mortgaged with him, extinguished pro tanto; or, in other words, he remains entitled to recover only a proportionate part of the amount due on the mortgage, that is to say, the portion of the debt which bears the same relation to the whole amount of the debt as the value of the property purchased bears to the value of the property comprised in the mortgage. The principle of S. 82, T.P Act, should be applied to such a case and the mortgagee should not by his purchase be permitted to improve his position and should be treated in the same manner as a stranger would be if he happens to purchase the property and the value of the property to be taken into account is the value of the property, as it existed on the date of the mortgage unaffected by any subsequent increase in the value on account of subsequent improvements or any subsequent decrease in value. The words "remaining due" in the last paragraph of S. 60. T. P. Act are, to some extent, misleading, and must not be taken too literally. ——S. 83—Deposit by mortgagor—If extinguishes security.

The mere act of the mortgagor in making a deposit under S. 83 of the T. P. Act does not cause an extinction of the security as if there has been valid satisfaction. That result can follow only when the mortgagee applies for and receives the money in terms of that section. If, therefore, the deposit made by the mortgagor is drawn out by somebody who is not entitled to it and is not available to the mortgagee when he applies for its withdrawal, the mere fact of the deposit does not extinguish the mortgagee's right to enforce the mortgage. There is no principle that when a mortgage has been paid off by more persons than one, only the person who makes the final payment in point of time is entitled to the right of subrogation. The one essential proviso for the coming into existence of the right of subrogation is that a mortgage shall have been redeemed in full. If the mortgage has been paid off by two persons neither of whom would have been able to pay it off without the help of the other, there is no principle on which one of them should be granted and the other denied the right of subrogation. R, the father of defendant No. 1 borrowed in 1927, Rs. 1,000 from Government under the Land Improvements Loans Act for the improvement of a plot of land A. He also gave plots B, C and D of which also he was owner as collateral security. In 1929, R mortgaged plots B and C to the 3rd defendant. On 25th January, 1932, he sold plots A and D to the plaintiff for Rs. 5000 out of which Rs. 1000 was kept with the plaintiff for discharging the tagai debt to Government. Prior to this in 1930, the second defendant obtained a money decree against R, and attached plot A four days before the purchase by the plaintiff, and on 4th February, 1933, he purchased that plot in execution of his decree. Plaintiff paid off the tagai debt due to Government in three instalments, on 23—5—1932, 18—3—1933 and 13—11—1934. On 23—3—1933, plaintiff brought a suit against the 2nd defendant for possession of plot A, but it was dismissed on the ground that the 2nd defendant had a prior claim as attaching decree-holder, having attached it prior to the sale to plaintiff. In June, 1935 he brought the present suit, claiming a charge on plots A, B and C; and claiming to recover the amount paid by him to the Government from defendants 1, 2 and 3 relying on S.92, T. P. Act and S. 69, Contract Act.

P. Act; (3) that the 3rd paragraph of S. 92 did not also apply as there was no registered agreement giving him the right of subrogation; (4) that S. 69 of the Contract Act did not apply so as to entitle the plaintiff to a personal decree against the defendants; because in the first place the payment to the Government had to be regarded as the act of the plaintiff's vendor and not the act of the plaintiff, and in the second place, it was a payment which he was bound to make under the terms of his agreements with R under the sale-deed, and it was not therefore open to him to say that it was a payment which another was bound to make under S. 69, Contract Act; (5) that the plaintiff's only legal remedy was to sue his vendor for damages and that present suit was misconceived. T. P. ACT (1882), S. 102.

Where a person purchases a property in execution of a charge decree and a mortgagee of the property subsequent to the charge decree and before the Court auction, sues on his mortgage, the purchaser under the charge decree cannot claim priority to the extent of the charge. S. 101, Transfer of Property Act, has no application. In the cases governed by the section, the one having his own interest to protect buys out the interest of the other, that is to say, the owner buys up the charge, or the chargeholder buys up the property and steps into the shoes of the owner. But each has an interest to protect at the date of the purchase. That is not the position where a stranger having no interest to protect, deliberately, with eyes open, purchases in order to enable the owner and chargeholder to extinguish the charge between them. In such a case the stranger purchaser is not in a position to act in either of two ways. He is not protecting his interest and is only in the position of a money-lender who advances to pay off the charge and then after the charge is extinguished, purchases in lieu of his own debt. Subsequently an assignee of the first mortgage purchased the property of the mortgagor in auction in execution of a money decree of his own. In a suit on the first mortgage where it was contended that the assignee of the first mortgagee by suing for redemption of the second mortgage had elected to give up his rights under the earlier mortgage, it was held that there could be no merger as the assignee was held not to have acquired any interest in the property by his auction purchase, and that the filing of the second suit was a clear indication of his intention to keep alive his rights under the prior mortgage. A clause in a lease required the lessees to deliver over possession of the demised premises at the determination of the tenancy in the same good condition as it was at the time the lessees entered into possession subject to wear and tear. The liability of a lessee when the premises are destroyed or damaged by fire in his occupation is to be determined with reference to S. 108, T. P. Act, Cls. (m) and (o). A lessee is not liable for a damage caused to the leased property by fire while the property was in lessee's occupation unless negligence of the lessee was proved. In an action for damages caused to a building by fire as a result of negligence of the defendant the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish negligence of the defendant. In certain circumstances and in proof of certain facts a presumption of negligence may be raised against the defendant. Where a fire was proved to have started from a room used as a kitchen in the first floor (a pucca room) of a house and it was also definitely proved that the right of the occurrence was calm and that the fire was not an act of God or an act of an incendiary, it was held that it was for the occupant of the house to establish how the fire got into the room and how it burnt the house and in the absence of an explanation on the occupant's part it should be presumed that there must have been some negligence on his part. ——Validity—Indefiniteness or uncertainty—Test.

Indefiniteness or uncertainty in relation to the objects of a trust may render the entire trust void. To determine uncertainty or indefiniteness in relation to trusts one of the rules of the English Courts of equity is that the Court must be in a position to supervise the trust and administer it in case of a breach of trust or in case of any of the circumstance arising in connection with it in which such a course becomes necessary and where the Court is not in a position to administer the trust by reason of the vagueness of the objects of the trust, the trust is void. On a construction of the deed in question it was held that the trust was for national education and for the establishment and maintenance of a school where national education was to be imparted and for a boarding house and for giving scholarships for foreign studies and that hence the trust deed could not be attacked on the ground either that it was vague or non-charitable or opposed to public policy. Generally a 'servant of the village community' is a person who is not paid separately for the individual work he does, but receives periodical remuneration from the community, whether at the time of harvest or otherwise. A tailor finds no place in the list given in Sch. I of the U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act and if he is to be regarded as an agriculturist within the meaning of the term in S. 2 (2) of the Act, he has to show that he is not paid by the job, but is recompensed by some customary mode of periodical payment. The applicant himself cannot institute such a suit, nor could the other heirs make him a defendant to such a suit. But, when once the apportionment has been made by the Special Judge under S. 9 (6), it will be open to any member of the family who have not applied under the Encumbered Estates Act to institute a suit under S. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act, for it would become their separate debts thereafter in respect of which they can institute suits for accounting. What S. 44 of the Court of Wards Act provides is that although the Court of Wards may release at any time any person or property from its superintendence subject to the control of the Local Government under S. 5, it shall not so release any property the proprietor of which has been disqualified under Cl. (b) or (d) of sub-S. (1) of S. 8 without the previous sanction of the Local Government. In other words, an order of the Court of Wards for the release of any estate from superintendence is always subject to the control of the Local Government. that is the Local Government has the last word always in the matter, but that in cases to which Cls. (b) or (d) of sub-S (1) of S 8 applies the Court of Wards may not even pass a resolution for the release of the property without the sanction of the Local Government previously obtained. The liabilities of an auctioneer and a seller to refund the deposit to the purchaser in respect of sale which had gone off owing to the default of the seller, are joint and several, though arising out of one transaction. Hence a decree obtained against the seller alone in respect of such a liability under the U. P Encumbered Estates Act is no bar to the purchaser obtaining a fresh decree in the regular proceedings against the auctioneer with regard to the deposit. There is no objection to the two decrees being granted subject to the condition that if any money is realised in execution of one decree, it will have to be credited in the other and the purchaser will not have any right to recover the amount twice over. ——Rules—R. 6 and C. P. Code, S. 114—Power of review in a case under Encumbered Estates Act.

Though old R. 6 of the Encumbered Estates Act Rules applied only to proceedings before the Special Judge, the new rule applies to all proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act. The power of review cannot be said to be a matter of substantive law. The power of review given by S. 114, C. P. Code, is given to all Courts and consequently it is not a power for which a specific provision in the Act itself need be insisted upon when the whole of the C. P Code has been extended to proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act by R. 6. Hence the Sub Divisional Officer is legally competent to review any of his own orders passed under the Encumbered Estates Act. The intention of the U. P. ——S. 4—Competency to apply under—Auction-purchaser subject to encumbrances.

The whole scheme of the Act shows that the debts must be those of the landlord and not of any one else. If a vendee or auction-purchaser purchases a property subject to encumbrances, he knows full well at the time of the purchase what amount in cash he will have to pay to the mortgagees before he becomes the full owner of the property and so there is no reason why he should be allowed any of the benefits given by the Encumbered Estates Act. Such a purchaser is not entitled to apply under S. 4 in respect of the encumbrances. ——S. 4—Joint applications contemplated by—Mere existence of a single joint decree—If justifies joint application.

S. 4 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act contemplates joint applications by (1) members of a joint Hindu family and (2) heirs of a deceased debtor. There might also be a joint application where all the debts of the applicants are joint though their properties may be separate. The provisions of sub-S. (3) of S. 4 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act clearly contemplate the possibility of proceedings being taken by a landlord first under the Agriculturists' Relief Act and later under the Encumbered Estates Act. S. 14 (4) (c) of the Encumbered Estates Act does not rule out of consideration a decree passed under the Agriculturists' Relief Act. The proper construction to be placed on that provision, is that the Special Judge, while disposing of a matter under the Encumbered Estates Act, shall not apply the provisions of the Agriculturists' Relief Act, and not that he shall ignore a decision already arrived at under that Act. The fact that parties have come to an arrangement out of Court on the basis of the provisions of the Agriculturists' Relief Act cannot affect the legal position. Where the parties have somehow arrived at a settlement of their mortgage account, executed a receipt and made an endorsement respectively in accordance therewith, if the transaction so evidenced is valid and legally proved, it is not open to the Special Judge under the Encumbered Estates Act to reopen the question of the mortgagor's liability under the mortgage, ignoring the receipt and the endorsement. To justify the appointment of a receiver under S. 9-C, evidence of mismanagement is necessary. ——S. 9-D—Condition as to security in case of debtor receiver—Propriety.

It is both unnecessary as well as unreasonable to demand security when one of the debtor applicants is appointed a receiver; for, the whole of his property is already under the possession of the Court and can serve as security (Harper, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) GHULAM HUSAIN v. LACHMAN PRASAD. 1941 O.W.N. 699= 1941 R.D. 383 (1)=1941 A.W.R. ——S. 9-D—Debtor as receiver—Order directing him to furnish security—Propriety.

As long as the proceedings under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act are not finished the debtor applicant is incapable himself of giving any security either personal or in property. Hence, where the debtor applicant himself is appointed receiver, it is unnecessary to insist on his giving security, for the whole of his property is already under the control of the Collecter for the purpose of liquidation. Collection charges can be allowed even when the debtor is the receiver. Where an order appointing a receiver directs him to take the permission of the Court to incur expenses, it will be inconvenient both to the Court and the receiver. Certain expenses like collection charges have to be incurred. The usual procedure in such cases is to fix a ——S. 9-D—Receiver—Appointment — Discretion—Exercise of.

Under S. 9-D of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act the Assistant Collector dealing with a case has full discretion no doubt, but it must be exercised judicially. A short assertion that an appointment will be in the best interests of the debtor cannot take the place of a reasoned argument justifying such an order. Where there is neither evidence of disparity between the value of the property and the debts nor evidence of likelihood of misuse, an order for appointment of receiver cannot be supported. ——S. 9-D—Receiver—Appointment for the whole of debtor's property—Validity.

An order for the appointment of a receiver not only for the property the possession of which was transferred under S. 35 of the Encumbered Estates Act, but of the whole property belonging to the debtor applicant cannot be passed under S. 9-D of the Act. ——S. 9-D—Receiver — Appointment—Grounds—Debtor failing to pay debt out of profits—Security sufficient.

Where the debtor is in possession of property and in receipt of profits and does not pay anything towards the debts, a case would exist for the appointment of a receiver if the debt were not adequately secured. ——S. 9-D—Receiver—Appointment — Grounds—Debtor's property not saleable under Redemption Act.

Where the property is not saleable under the Debt Redemption Act, it cannot on that ground be said that it should not also be subject to the appointment of a receiver. On the other hand, it is all the more important in such a case that its management should be good so as to produce the assets liable for liquidation. Further in such a case as the creditor is deprived of his main security for his debt very much less evidence is required to justify his claim to the appointment of a receiver. ——S. 9-D—Receiver — Appointment under—Circumstances—For what property.

Where the valuation of the property is very much less than the amount of the debts and there is no disagreement between the two sets of debtors nor is there any allegation of mismanagement or evidence of it, an order appointing a receiver in such a case must be regarded as an order under S. 9 D of the U. ——S. 9-D—Receiver — Circumstances for and against appointment of.

Per Harper, S.M.—The discretion given to the Collector under S. 9-D of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act is general. It is not necessary for the creditor to show, as in S. 9-C that the debtor is causing the property to deteriorate so as to affect its value in liquidation.

Per Sathe, J.M.—Where the ability of the debtor's estate to satisfy all the debts is undoubted and the creditor's money is not in jeopardy, it is not necessary to appoint a receiver, and particularly when the application is made in respect of only a small portion of the property. ——S. 9-D—Receiver—Debtor, when to be appointed.

Even when there are no other relevant facts, if a creditor applies for the appointment of a receiver, the application should be granted, but in such a case the receiver should be the debtor himself, unless there are good reasons to the contrary. ——S. 9-D—Receiver—Grounds—Debts exceeding value of security—If a good ground when debtor objects.

——S. 9-D—Receiver—Grounds—Debt in excess of value—Debtor, good manager—Creditor if can be appointed.

The fact that the debt is much in excess of the value, is not by itself a reason for the appointment of a receiver. Where during the time the debtor was in possession, he has shown himself to be a good manager it is he that should be appointed receiver and not the creditor, if at all a receiver is to be appointed. Where delivery of possession to the judgment-debtor under S. 35 of the U. P. ——S. 9 D—Receiver—Grounds for appointment—Debtor's incapacity to manage—Presumption as to, drawn from mere existence of debt—If justified.

From the mere fact that a debtor allowed himself to be submerged in debt, it cannot be presumed that he is incapable of managing his property and that hence a receiver should be appointed. If that were so a receiver would have to be appointed in every case under Act. There should be something more tangible than this before a receiver could be appointed. (*Harper, S.M. and Sathe, J. ——S. 9 D—Receiver—Grounds for appointment—Failure to provide for deposit of interest prior to starting of liquidation proceedings.

Where liquidation proceedings have not yet started, and the debtor applicant is not called upon to pay any thing towards liquidation, the fact that the debtor has made no arrangement for the deposit of interest, is no ground for the appointment of a receiver. Where the area is small it would be most inadvisable to appoint a receiver for it. (Harper, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) BITTAN KUAR v. SATROHAN SINGH.

Where the valuation of the property of the debtor is less than the total debt and the appointment of a receiver would involve undue expense, there is no ground for the appointment of a receiver and particularly so in case where it is open to the applicant to apply for the sale of the property in liquidation proceedings. Where the creditor is liable to lose his security by reason of the property not being subject to sale under the provisions of the Debt Redemption Act, it is reasonable that a receiver should be appointed. The proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act must be considered to be a suit and the Court has to make a list of all the creditors. In order to see that no bogus creditors come on the list it is necessary to make the other creditors parties. Even before the amendment of S. 14 of the Act the Special Judge had the power to add all creditors. The provisions of O. 1, R. 10 (2) C.P. Code, are not inconsistent with S. 14 of the Act and hence it applies to such proceedings. (Agarwal, J.) KANIZ ZOHRA BEGAM v. TEJ NARAIN.

——Ss. 14 and 15—Inquiry under—Decree and findings in earlier proceedings under S. 33, Agriculturists' Relief Act—Binding nature—Duty of Special Judge—Reopening the whole matter—Revision.

Where in certain proceedings under S. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act a decree has been passed in favour of the creditor, the decree and the findings in those proceedings must be taken as binding between the parties in subsequent proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act. According to S. 15 of the latter Act, the Judge in proceeding under the Act is to take those findings and decree and on their basis pass a fresh decree. It is not open to the Judge to reopen the whole matter and come to a fresh decision for himself. If he does go behind those findings and the decree, there is a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction and his order is certainly open to revision. If in the prior decree a lesser amount has been fixed for interest between debtor and creditor than what is allowed under the Encumbered Estates Act, it cannot be said that there is any inconsistency between the decree and the provisions of S. 14 of the Encumbered Estates Act. An application under the Encumbered Estates Act is not in itself an application for the redemption of a mortgage. But the proceedings under the Act ripening into a decree under S. 14 (7) are at the same time proceedings for the determination of the amount due from the landlord to the claimant on the date of the application under S. 4, and also proceedings for redemption of the mortgaged property. In effect by merely filing his application under the Act the debtor applicant has instituted proceedings for redemption of all his mortgaged properties. The list sent by the Special Judge under S. 19 (2) of the Encumbered Estates Act is only in respect of the property against which action can be taken for attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts decreed by the Special Judge. But it is by no means an exhaustive list of the whole property to possession over which the debtor applicant is entitled under the Act. Consequently the debtor applicant is not prevented from applying under S. 35 in respect of property over which he is entitled to retain possession but which has not been included in the list sent by the Special Judge. S. 20 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act is a special provision and meets a case in which the proceedings before the Special Judge are due to be quashed. There can be no execution proceedings in the case of costs awarded under S. 20. ——Ss. 23 to 28—Liquidation—Procedure—Private and individual agreements—If and when permitted.

Under the scheme of the United Provinces Encumbered Estates Act liquidation of all debts has to be done together by the Collector according to the procedure laid down in the Act. A private sale by the debtor to a creditor is not one of the regular methods of procedure permitted by the Act. It could be allowed if all the parties agree to it. In the absence of such an agreement liquidation must proceed according to the methods prescribed by the Act. (Sathe, A.M.) LAI TA PRASAD v. DHARAM DASS. 1941 R.D. 824= 1941 O.A. ——S. 24—Collector's position in proceedings under —Stay of sale—Who can order.

The Collector when he proceeds to act under S. 24 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act is in the position of an execution Court and he is bound to carry out the orders of the Special Judge as conveyed under S. 19 of the Act. Hence it is for the Special Judge to issue an order for stay to the Collector. (Harper, S.M.) BEHARI LAL v. SHIV CHANDRA. 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 593 (1)=1941 R.D. 532 (1)= 1941 O.A. (Supp,) 547 (1).

——Ss. 24 and 19 (2)—Limits to the Collector's power to sell—Items not included in the list sent under S. 19 (2)—Proper procedure.

S. 24 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act limits the Collector's power to sell only that movable property which has been reported to him by the Special Judge under S. 19 (2) of the Act. Where certain ornaments pledged with a creditor are not included in the list, the Collector would be perfectly right not only in refusing to sell those ornaments but also in ordering their return to the debtors' applicants under S. 35 of the Act. The only remedy open to the aggrieved creditor in such a case is to get the list sent under S. 19 (2) corrected by Civil Courts. Till this is done the Collector has no jurisdiction to sell them. What the second proviso to S. 24 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act means is that the house must be left to the debtor if it is free from mortgage. The order for its sale can only be justified on the ground that liquidation by instalments is not possible without sale. The Collector should before ordering sale of the residential house of the debtor, ascertain the result of the sale of other items of property. Where in proceedings for delivery of possession under S. 35 of the U. P. ——S. 35—Delivery of possession, when decree had not been sent to Collector—Legality.

It is clearly contrary to the provisions of S. 35 of the U. P. Delivery under S. 35 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act can be given only to a person entitled under the provisions of the Act. ——S. 35—Joint mortgage by two co-sharers—One of the mortgagors applying under Encumbered Estates Act—If can obtain delivery of possession.

Where one out of the two co-sharer mortgagors applies under the United Provinces Encumbered Estates Act and his mortgage is extinguished and the mortgagee remains in possession of the share of the other mortgagor, there could be no delivery of possession to the debtor without partition. The delivery can only be symbolical. (Harper, S.M and Shirreff, J.M.) TULA RAM v. JAGAT SINGH. 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 496= 1941 R.D. 547=1941 O.A. (Supp.) 455.

——S. 35—Right to possession—Disallowance of mortgage in favour of occupancy tenant—If can affect tenancy rights.

Where a mortgage in favour of an occupancy tenant is disallowed by the Special Judge, it is only the claim on basis of the mortgage that is wiped out. But the rights of the tenant as an occupancy tenant long prior to the mortgage, could not be wiped out and they will still survive after the extinguishment of the mortgagee rights. In such a case there can be no question of restoration of possession to the debtor. (Harper, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) TULSI RAM v. BALDEO PRASAD PANDEYA. 1941 R.D. 289=1941 A.W.R. ——S. 35 and Rule 6 of Rules under the Act—Scope of R. 6 of the Rules—Extent of powers of Collector under—No fear of mismanagement—Order to deposit amount for future interest—If justified.

R. 6 of the rules framed under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act has a very wide application. Under that rule the Collector is entitled to exercise the very considerable powers sanctioned by R. 1 of O. 39, C. P. Code. But where the Collector in an application under S. 35 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act has found that there was no fear of the property being mismanaged in any way, there is no justification for proceedings under R. 6 of the Act and ordering that a certain amount should be deposited for future interest. ——S. 35—Standing crops—Delivery of land to debtor—If can be delayed.

The general principle is that as no compensation can legally be ordered delivery of possession should be delayed until the crops have been cut by the creditor. S. 35 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act does not require that in all cases the possession of the property should be transferred to the proprietor whether he applies for it or not. The right to apply for possession is only optional with the debtor and hence it is open to him to contract himself out of his right to claim possession under S. 35 of the Act and the agreement is not such as would defeat the provision of law and is not void under S. 23 of the Contract Act. Where first appeals are filed before the amendment of S. 45, though orders thereon are passed after the date of the amendment, no second appeal lies under S. 45 (2-a) of the United Provinces Encumbered Estates Act. The finality attaching to certain orders could not be defeated by the passing of a subsequent Act unless the Act gave retrospective effect in express terms. An intention on the part of the Legislature to give retrospective effect to sub-S. (2-a) of S. 45 cannot be inferred by implication. (Thomas, C.J. and Ghulam Hasan, J.) KANIZ ABID v. ANRUDH SINGH. 1941 O.A. 834 = 1941 A.W.R. (Rev) 940 = 1941 O.W.N. 1213.

——S. 45 (2-a)—Right of second appeal—If retrospective—Original order prior to and appellate order subsequent to amendment.

A right of appeal is a creature of the statute and unless the Act introducing the fresh right of appeal gives retrospective effect to the right, rights of the parties in the matter of appeal must be governed by the law which prevailed at the date of the institution of the suit. The provisions of S. 45 (2-a) of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act relating to second appeal has not been made retrospective. Hence, where the original order of the special judge was prior to the amendment, even if the appellate order is subsequent to the amendment, no second appeal lies against it. There is no period of limitation fixed at all by the statute for filing applications claiming ex-proprietary rights and the question whether the application is belated or not has to be decided on the basis of who is in possession. If the ex-proprietor himself is in possession then according to S. 36 (4) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, the ex-proprietary holding can be carved out at any time during the continuance of the ex-proprietary tenancy. But if somebody else is in possession then it has to be seen whether the ex-proprietor has lost his rights to sue that other person for possession. This will depend on who the man in wrongful possession is. If he happens to be the sole zamindar the period under Acts II of 1901 and III of 1926 will be six months and that under the U. P. Tenancy Act of 1939, three years. If however the wrongful possessor is not the sole zamindar then the period of limitation will be 12 years. Under S. 54 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, the powers of the Land Records Officer are limited to those matters which relate to maintenance and correction of records. which powers in ordinary times are exercised by the Collector. Under S. 40 questions of title are not determined at all and disputes under S. 40 are decided on the basis of possession. S. 42 only comes into play when the factum of tenancy is admitted on both sides and the dispute is only as to the class and nature of tenancy. Where the tenancy itself is in dispute any order passed either under S. 40 or S. 42 will not have the effect of res judicata and the decision will be liable to be reagitated in a Civil or Revenue Court. Where before the Land Records Officer, the tenancy is denied and the opposite party maintains that he is in adverse possession of the property and is not a tenant at all, and the Land Records Officer declares the latter to be an occupancy tenant, the order whether it be taken to have been passed either under S. 40 or S. 42, is not final between the parties and it is open to challenge at the instance of either party in subsequent proceedings in Revenue Court. U. P. LAND REV. ACT (1901), S. 107.

S. 106 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act provides that in 'perfect partition' the whole mahal is divided and the several portions become separate mahals, each severally responsible for the revenue distributed thereon. Once the right to a perfect partition is either admitted or established, the responsibility for payment of Government revenue will fasten upon each separate mahal formed newly and it is not open to the parties to enter into an agreement whereby the statutory liability to pay Government revenue imposed by the Act is contravened. A condition about the payment of Government revenue through the talukdar is a condition which imposes a restraint upon partition and cannot be enforced. Where four out of the five holders of a joint sir holding usufructuary mortgage of certain specified plots out of the sir holding subsequently sell them to another, the remaining co-sharer must be considered to be the sole sir holder of the whole sir holding and is therefore entitled to have his share made up first from it under S. 117, U. In such a case it cannot be said that under the proviso to S. 123, the sole co heir could only get so much area out of the joint holding as will make up his share in the total sir and khudkasht area of the patti. The phraseology used in S. 126 is ambiguous. It does say that the former sir holder shall be an ex-proprietary tenant if he continues to cultivate the land after the partition but it also says that the ex-proprietary rent shall be fixed before the partition is confirmed. A khudksht holder must know at the time of partition whether he wishes to cultivate after the partition and if he wishes to do so there is nothing to prevent him from claiming these ex-proprietary rights at once. Thus the rights should be claimed during the partition proceedings and a subsequent claim to them could not be admitted. (Harper, S.M and Shirreff, J.M.) WALI MAHOMED v NAZIR AHMAD.

Erecting a house for the accommodation of an idol found in a Municipal property cannot be regarded as 'maintaining or developing the value of the property vested in the Board' within the meaning of S. 7 (1) (q) of U. A 'work of public utility' within the meaning of S. 8 (1), cl. (b) of the U. P. Municipalities Act has to be for the benefit of the public in the wider sense of the word namely as including all classes of His Majesty's subjects. The Municipal Board acting under S. 8 (1) (b) has no power to apply municipal funds for founding or maintaining places of worship for the use of one community to the exclusion of others. But it does not thereby follow that in the interests of public safety or public convenience the Municipal Board cannot erect a building which may incidentally or indirectly be used as a place of worship exclusively by one community, provided the dominant intention of the Municipal Board in erecting the building is to make a provision for public safety and public convenience, and the idea for the place of worship comes in the scheme incidentally and indirectly and in absolute subordination to the dominant intention of public safety or convenience. According to S. 166 (2) of the Municipalities Act, the liability of the tax-payer to pay the tax is not made to depend upon the Board presenting a bill to the tax-payer. The liability arises the moment the tax-payer has been assessed and the money becomes due upon the date on which the Municipality have declared by their rules that the tax is payable. S. 177 of the Act creates a charge in favour of the Municipal Board in respect of all arrears of sums due on account of tax. Failure to present a bill does not disentitle the Municipality from enforcing the charge. The insufficiency of Municipal service is no ground for the tax-payer withholding the payment of tax. U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT (1916), S. 278.

The provisions of Ss. 189 and 120 of the U. P. Municipalities Act read with S. 8 (1) (j) do not confer upon the Municipality the power to take land outside the Municipality for the purposes of a drain or a sewage works without notice to the owner or occupier of that land and without his consent and without compensation. Nor do these provisions entitle the Municipality to drain the sewage from the city on to private property outside the boundaries of the city without the owner's consent. The provisions of the Act seem to contemplate that a Municipality, if it desires for any purpose to use land outside its boundaries, it should acquire the land, for example, under the Land Acquisition Act, or by private agreement, with the sanction of the Local Government. There is nothing in S. 189 to entitle a Municipality to take its sewage outside its boundaries and to dispose of it where it likes upon a private Jheel regardless of the rights of the property owner. S. 3 of the U. P. ——and Contract Act, S. 23—Object and intention of Act XVIII of 1939—Contract for payment of rent decree—Enforceability if barred.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting Act XVIII of 1939 was to remit arrears of rent which had accrued prior to rabi 1344 by barring their recovery in the Revenue Courts. The provisions of the Act would therefore be inapplicable to a suit on a contract in a Civil Court unless they can be indirectly invoked by means of some other provision of the law. Where a suit is filed on a bond executed by defendant in pursuance of an agreement to pay the amount in respect of a prior decree for rent obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant there is nothing unlawful within the meaning of S. 23 of the Contract Act in the consideration or the object of the agreement and it cannot be affected by subsequent legislation barring a suit in the Revenue Court for recovery of arrears of rent. ——S. 3 (9)—Khudkasht — Meaning, if different from old Act—Landlord seizing land and cultivating it —It can acquire title.

There is no definition of Khudkasht in the old Act but there is nothing to show that the new Act intended to place a new interpretation on the word. The definition refers to land cultivated by a landlord 'as such'. This does not mean that the landlord can seize the land of any tenant and by cultivating it acquire a legal title as Khudkasht. ——S. 3 (18)—Rent—Claim for payment per grove entered in wajib-ul-arz*—Nature of.*

Per Sathe, J.M.—Where a claim is made for payment of Re. 1 per grove as entered in the wajib ul arz, it is evidently on account of the use or occupation of the land by the defendant for the purposes of maintaining a grove thereon. Hence it is in the nature of rent. This is all the more so, for, if a share of timber or its value when the grove is cut down is rent a share of the recurring income of the grove from the fruit of the trees must certainly be held to be rent.

Per Harper, S.M.—A cess is a due (1) payable by a tenant; (2) on account of occupation of land; (3) of the nature of rent payable in addition to the rent of tenants. The claim for payment of Re. 1 per grove complies with these conditions. As the holding is held 'bila lagan' but over and above that it is due to pay Re. 1 as a fixed sum calculated on a defined basis, it is clearly a cess. (*Harper, S. Under S. 296 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, it is only the corresponding provision of the Act and not all the provisions of the Act which have to be applied to execution pending on 1st January, 1940. S. 158 of the new Act, which is altogether a new provision and does not correspond to any section under the old Act, cannot be said to correspond with the provisions of old Act under which an execution may have been filed. All sections of the new Act do not become applicable to an execution case merely because it was pending on 1st January, 1940. Hence S. 158 cannot be brought forward against the continuation of execution proceedings pending on the 1st January, 1940, in respect of arrears of rent subsequent to ejectment under S. 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act. Moreover the wording of S. 158 shows that it applies to a tenant who is ejected, and not who has been ejected. It applies only to ejectments ordered after 1st January, 1940 and not before. In the case of ejectment of a trespasser the cause of action is a continuing one. Though such a cause of action may have arisen before the new Act came into force, a suit in respect of it can be filed after the new Act came into force by one only of the co-sharers inasmuch as S. 180 of the new Tenancy Act gives such a right to sue. S. 180 only prescribes that if the occupation of land took place when the old Act was in force then the occupation must be in accordance with the provisions of that Act. But it does not apply the provisions of the old Act to the title of the plaintiff to institute a suit which must evidently be governed by the provisions of the Act in force when the suit is filed. When a suit by some only of the co-sharers of a mahal under S. 44 of the Agra Tenancy Act is pending when the new Act came into force, it has to be disposed of under the corresponding provision of the new Act (i.e.) S. 180 and would be maintainable, if the plaintiffs could show that they were among the people entitled to settle the land. ——Ss. 180 and 175—Ejectment under—Difference between—Dismissal of suit under S. 180—Decreeing under S. 175 in appeal—Procedure to be followed.

The considerations which would apply to ejectment under S. 175 of the U P. Hence, if a suit under S. 180 is to be decreed under S. 175, in appeal, it will have to go back to the trial Court for the framing of issues and fresh disposal. S. 180 of the Tenancy Act corresponds to S. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. Hence a suit filed under S. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, if pending at the time of the new Tenancy Act coming into force, has to be disposed of under S. 180 of the new Tenancy Act, but the other sections of the new Act will not apply. S. 180 of the Tenancy Act lays down that the alleged trespass must be in accordance with the provisions of the law for the time being in force. Hence the pending case has to be decided according to S. 127 of the Rent Act. If the grove is proved to have ceased to be a grove at the time of the institution of the suit, the grove holder becomes a trespasser and is liable to be ejected. When in execution of a decree under S. 61 of the Oudh Rent Act the ejectment is complete, though a remedy by suit is open to the tenant under S. 183 of the Tenancy Act, it does not prevent him from raising objections under S. 47, C. P. Code, in the execution proceedings against the ejectment. As the Tenancy Act provides a remedy by way of suit the only effect of S. 243 (1) (a) of the Tenancy Act is that the bar of separate suits created by S. 47, C. P. Code, in matters relating to execution, cannot apply to suits under the Tenancy Act. (Sathe, A.M.) CHAHABIRAJ KUNWARI v. SUMERA. 1941 A.W R. (Rev.) 1089= 1941 O.A (Supp.) 879.

——Ss. 271 (2) and 272—Order of remand by Commissioner in appeal—If appealable

While S. 272 of the United Provinces Tenancy Act does not forbid an appeal, S. 271 (2) does not provide for an appeal from a remand order passed by a Commissioner in an appeal. O. 43, R. 1, C. P. Code, is inapplicable to appellate orders of Commissioners, and appeals against orders under the United Provinces Tenancy Act are governed by S. 271 (2) of that Act and not by the general provisions contained in the C. P. Code. Hence no appeal lies against an order of remand passed by the Commissioner in a pending appeal. (Harper, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) LACHMAN NONIA v. LOCHAN NONIA. 1941 A.W.R. ——S. 275—Agra Tenancy Act (1926), S. 252—Revision—Competency—Case not decided.

In view of the precise wording of S. 252 of the Agra Tenancy Act and S 275 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, no revision application will lie before the Board unless the case has been decided. Where the Collector had not only held that a reference to arbitrators was invalid, but also directed the Assistant Collector to dispose of the case afresh, the rights of the parties have not been decided in any way at all and hence the Collector's order could not be questioned in revision. ——S. 275—Case 'decided'—Case stayed under S. 7, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act—Order if revisable.

A case which has been stayed under S. 7, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, cannot be held to have been decided. Before a case can be held to have been 'decided' there must be some pronouncement at least on merits. Hence no revision will lie against an order for stay passed under S. 7 of the U. P. ——S. 275—Material irregularity—Dismissal of claim on point not in issue—Revision.

Where the defendant to a suit for arrears of theka money has admitted that he is the thekadar and has not denied that theka money is due from him to the plaintiff the question of registration of the theka is not relevant to the case. When such a point is not raised in the first Court and not even in the grounds of appeal to the Deputy Commissioner, a dismissal of the whole claim by the Deputy Commissioner on the ground of want of registration, is a material irregularity and is hence open to revision. (Harper, S.M. and Shirreff, J.M.) SURJU v. LEKHRAJ. 1941 A W.R. (Rev.) 922 = 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 796 = 1941 R.D. 791.

——Ss. 275 and 286—Order referring issue to civil Court—Revision.

An order under S. 286 of the U. P. Tenancy Act referring an issue to the Civil Court cannot be construed as one giving a pronouncement on merits on any of points involved, and it does not even cut at the root of the question in issue between the parties and could not be taken as deciding the case. Hence it is not revisable under S. 275. (Shirreff, J.M. and Sathe, A.M.) GOVIND RAM v. MANOHAR LAL. 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 821 = 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 977 = 1941 R.D. 953.

——S. 275—Revision—Competency—Case decided—Setting aside ex parte decree.

No revision application will lie to the Board unless a case has been decided, i.e., the order must be one which cuts at the very root of the question between the parties. ——S. 275 and Agra Tenancy Act, S. 252—Revision—Competency—Order referring issue to Civil Court by Assistant Collector—Decision in case appealable to District Judge.

Where any decision that might be given in a case before an Assistant Collector would be appealable only to the District Judge, a revision against an order referring an issue to the Civil Court by the Assistant Collector in that suit would not lie. ——Ss. 275 and 296—Revision—Competency—Order that decree under S. 61 of Oudh Rent Act is not executable after U. P. Tenancy Act.

Where it is held by the lower Courts that there could be no execution by way of ejectment, of decrees passed under S. 61 of the old Oudh Rent Act as there was no section in the new Act corresponding to S. 61 of the old Act, it means that those Courts held that under S. 296 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, they had no jurisdiction to allow execution of the decree. This is clearly a matter which comes within S 275 of the U.P. Tenancy Act and a revision does lie. ——Ss. 275 and 276—Revision—Forum—Determining factor.

Where an appeal lies to the District Judge and not to the Commissioner under S. 265 (1) (a) of the U. P. Tenancy Act against a decision in a suit, a revision in respect of the case will therefore also lie to the High Court under S 276 and not to the Board under S. 275.

Under the Agra Tenancy Act, S. 271 (4) if the question of proprietary right was not in issue in appeal, the appeal lay in the Revenue Court. Under the U. P. Tenancy Act, S. 286 (4) once an issue has been decided by a Civil Court the subsequent appeal from the order of the Revenue Court lies to the Civil Court which has jurisdiction to hear appeals from the Court to which the issue of proprietary title had been referred. Where the suit was instituted while the Old Act was in force but the appeal was filed after the New Act came into force, it is the Old Act which applies, for the right of appeal is governed by the date of the institution of the suit and not by the date of the first Court's order or of filing of the appeal. subsequent to that date—Benefit of S. 294, if would be available.

For the purposes of the applicability of S. 294 of the U. P. Tenancy Act it is the date of the actual ejectment which counts and not that of the ejectment order. Where an order for ejectment is passed prior to 1st April, 1937, but the actual ejectment is carried out after that date, that does not prevent the tenant from obtaining the benefit of S. 294. If a tenant sticks to the land notwithstanding his formal ejectment under S. 61 of the Oudh Rent Act the subsequent proceedings under S. 127 should be deemed to be only a continuation of the proceedings for the effective ejectment of the tenant, instituted under S. 61 and reinstatement could take place even if there has been an intermediate order for ejectment as trespasser. ——S. 294—Reinstatement — Intention behind—Default in period subsequent to 1344 F—Benefit if denied.

The intention behind S. 294, U. P. A subsequent ejectment under S. 44, Agra Tenancy Act, as trespasser of a tenant already once ejected, does not operate as a bar to proceedings under S. 294, United Provinces Tenancy Act, provided the later ejectment was in consequence of the previous infructuous ejectment under S. 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act. ——S. 294—Remedy under—Availability—Pendency of appeal against order granting review of order of ejectment under S. 80, Agra Tenancy Act.

Where an appeal is preferred against an order of the Assistant Collector granting review of his own previous order for the tenant's ejectment under S. 80, Agra Tenancy Act, the tenant can during its pendency apply under S. 294, U. ——Ss. 294 and 246—Restoration of possession of holding—Application by one of four co-tenants—Maintainability—Condonation under O. 1, R. 13, C. P. Code.

It is not competent for one of four co-tenants to apply alone for restoration of possession of holding under S. 294 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, in view of the clear provisions in S. 246 of the Act. The irregularity cannot be condoned under O. 1, R. 13, C. P. Code, though the objection is raised at a late stage. ——S. 294—Scope of—If creates any new right.

S. 294 of the U. P. Tenancy Act only gives a concession to tenants ejected on account of arrears of rent; it does not create any new right in favour of tenants ejected on other grounds. Hence where ejectment proceedings have been taken both under S. 61 and Ss. 52 and 55 of the Oudh Rent Act, the tenants are not entitled to any relief under S. 294 of the Tenancy Act. (Shirreff, J. ——S. 294—'Tenant'—Meaning—Applicability of section.*

The use of the word 'tenant' in S. 294 of the U. P. Tenancy Act is only descriptive and the section applies equally whether it deals with a tenant or with a cultivator who before the order of ejectment was a tenant. (Harper, S.M.) DWARKA SINGH v. SUMER KURMI. 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 503 = 1941 R.D. 521 (2) = 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 462.

——S. 294 (1)—'Ejected', meaning of—Conditions necessary for section to apply—Reinstatement, if affected by an intermediate order under S. 44, Agra Tenancy Act.

The word 'ejected' in S. 294 (1) of the U. P. Tenancy Act means actual transfer of possession on the spot and not merely the passing of a decree or order to the effect that the tenant be ejected. The three ingredients necessary which have to be satisfied before S. 294 can apply are:—(1) the tenant must have been ejected for non-payment of arrears of rent after 1st April, 1937; (2) the application for reinstatement must be filed within 6 months of the commencement of Act XVII of 1939; (3) the land must not have been let to another person in 1345 F. and been continuously so let since then. An intermediate, order under S. 44 of the Agra Tenancy Act, would be disregarded and a reinstatement may take place in spite of it. ——S. 296—Applicability—Conditions—Proceedings for re-delivery of possession under S. 151, C. P. Code—If affected by S. 296.

S. 296 of the U P. Tenancy Act applies only to (1) suits and (2) execution proceedings in respect of unsatisfied decrees pending on 1st January 1940. Where certain proceedings are taken under S. 151, C. P. Code, to obtain re-delivery of possession of certain property, they are obviously not a pending suit or proceedings for the execution of a decree and hence S. 296 of the U. P. Tenancy Act cannot apply to them. (Sathe, J.M.) AASAN v. PRAG NARAIN. 1941 O.W.N. 710 = 1941 R.D. 386 = 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 472 (2) = 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 431 (2).

——S. 296 and Oudh Rent Act, S. 60—Applicability—Ejectment proceedings started prior to new Act.

Where ejectment proceedings under the Oudh Rent Act had already started prior to the new Act coming into force then S. 296 of the new Act has no application to them, and they can be continued under the old Oudh Rent Act according to S. 6 (e) of the U. ——S. 296—Applicability—Execution application pending when new Act came into force—Limitation governing.

S. 296 of the U. P. Tenancy Act being a section having retrospective operation should be interpreted strictly and the section can be said to require only that the 'corresponding provision' of the new Act should be applied to the execution of a decree which has not been satisfied in full at the commencement of the Act. Other sections and provisions of the new Act can be applied only if they can be considered to be indissolubly linked with the corresponding provision. S. 254 which lays down limitation for execution applications cannot be said to be indissolubly linked with the procedure to be followed in giving effect to an execution application. Hence an application for the execution of a decree which is not fully satisfied on 1-1 1940 is governed by the Agra Tenancy Act and not by the new Act. U. P. TENANCY ACT (1939), S. 296.

Where during the pendency of an appeal against an order passed upholding objection under S. 151 of the Oudh Rent Act, the new Tenancy Act came into force, it was held that the appellate Court could give effect to S. 296 of the new Act and allow execution against the immovable property of the judgment-debtor. ——S. 296—Applicability—Proceedings under Ss. 18 and 19, Agra Tenancy Act—Not finished before new Act came into force—Procedure to be followed.

S. 296 of the U. P. Tenancy Act applies only to suits pending on 1—1—1940 and to those decrees which were unsatisfied on that date. It is not applicable to applications under Ss. 18 and 19 of the Agra Tenancy Act which are only applications and not suits. Per Sathe, J.M. (Harper, S.M. dissenting).—The use of the word decided in S. 296 of the U. P. The naming of the section under which a suit is instituted is only for the sake of convenience and does not limit the legal questions which may arise in the disposal of the suit,to that section only. Under S. 296 all such questions will have to be decided according to the provisions of the new Act and not the old Act. (Harper, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) BHOLA SINGH v. JAGDISH NARAIN SINGH.

——Sch IV, Group B, Sl. 18, Cl. (2) (a)—Starting point of limitation—Knowledge prior to dakhal dihani—If can affect.

According to Sl. 18, Cl. (2) (a) of Group B of Sch. IV to the U. P. Tenancy Act, limitation begins to run from the date the landholder first knew of the unauthorised occupation. Hence until the person obtains dakhal dihani over the proprietary rights and becomes a landholder limitation cannot count against him. His previous knowledge of defendant's possession not being in the capacity of that of a landholder cannot count for the calculation of the period of limitation. The words 'connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue' in S. 53 of the Upper Burma Land Revenue Regulation must be construed reasonably. The words 'collection of revenue' means collection by payment in the ordinary course, or recovery of arrears in the ways allowed by S. 41. If the revenue authorities proceed to enforce any process for the recovery of arrears of revenue the jurisdiction of the Civil Court will be barred. The Act makes no distinction between the types of Court to which it is to apply. It is applied to all suits which fulfil the conditions necessary irrespective of the kind of the Court in which they are instituted. Hence a Court of Small Causes is entitled to exercise the powers conferred by S. 3 (1) (b) of the Act. S. 3 is mandatory and the Court is bound to exercise the powers conferred the moment the facts bring the claim within the ambit of the Act. There was a prohibition against alienation by gift, sale, etc. The amount of the surplus was far greater than what was required to comply with the directions of the testatrix with regard to the religious charities The testatrix had no children of her own and she had brought up the residuary legatee as her daughter.

Held, that there was no dedication of the property (i.e., part of it which was directed to be let on rent) to charitable uses but only of the income, and that the property was taken by the residuary legatee subject to a charge in favour of the charity.

The present suit was brought by the children for partition and recovery of possession of $\frac{2}{3}$ of the properties on the ground that they and their mother took as tenants in common under the will, and a sale of the properties in execution of a decree obtained on the basis of a mortgage executed by their father, in a suit to which their mother alone was a party, would not bind their shares, she having no right to represent them as karnavathi. Held, that if a tavazhi was to be understood as consisting of a mother and her children and descendants in the female line, as observed in (1928) I.L.R. 51 Mad. 574 =55 M.L.J. 208, the provisions in the will in the present case being in conflict with the underlying idea of a tavazhi and the intention of the testator being to bequeath the property to his wife and his own offspring by her, the beneficiaries took only as tenants in common, that being so, the mother could not have represented her children (the present plaintiffs) in the previous litigation and therefore the sale in execution of the decree therein was not binding upon them. ———Construction—Rules — Intention of testator—Duty of Court.

The Court has no power to give effect to a hypothetical intention by supplying lacunae in the will and thereby making a new will for the testator. The Court cannot speculate as to what the testator may be supposed to have intended to write. The only intentions of the testator which the Court can carry out are intentions either expressly or impliedly expressed in the will. No indication of intention is sufficient to induce the Court to hold that a certain bequest has been made, unless, as a matter of fact, the bequest is made either expressly or by necessary implication in the will. Necessary implication does not mean natural necessity but so strong a possibility of intention, that a contrary intention cannot be supposed. (*Nasim Ali and B. N. ———Construction—Use of words 'malik kamil'.

Where in a will, in the earlier portions a person has been described as Manager 'muntazimkar' and it is also clear in view of other provisions in the will that the testator had no intention of conferring on that person any absolute interest or even a life-interest, a declaration in another portion of the will that that person is to be 'malik kamil' cannot confer on him any absolute right of ownership or even a life-estate. ———Legacy—Estate made over to legatee—Decree previously obtained against administratrix—If can be executed against legatee—Proper remedy of decree-holder.

The right of a creditor to follow the assets in the hands of a legatee is a right which has to be exercised by a suit and cannot be exercised merely by levying execution against the assets in the hands of the legatee. A decree obtained against an administratrix cannot, therefore, be executed against a legatee to whom the estate has since been handed over, and the proper remedy of the decree holder is to institute a suit against the legatee for the recovery of the money due to him. WORKMEN'S COMPEN. ACT (1923), S. 12.

Under S. 10 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, it is not necessary for a workman to give notice of every trivial accident to which he may be subject. But a workman is bound to give notice of any accident which is not merely trivial and it is not open to him to decide whether it is likely to give rise to a claim for compensation. If an accident, too trivial in the first instance to require notice, subsequently develops servious consequences, the obligation to give notice as soon as practicable would be met by giving notice when the consequences ensue. Until then there has not really been an accident. ———S. 12—Applicability and construction—Selling agent agreeing to take delivery of goods from manufacturer's godowns—Employment of contractor for such work—Workmen employed by contractor in such work—Accident resulting in death—Liability of selling agent for compensation.

The respondents who were the sole selling agents of a mill company manufacturing cloth. According to the terms of the agreement between them, the respondents had to take delivery at the mill's godowns where the mill stored them, and to sell them at a shop in Bombay, involving transport from the mill's godowns to the selling agent's shop. On 30—8—1939, the respondents engaged a firm of which one N was a partner, to transport the bales of cloth from the godowns to the shop and that firm hired a lorry from a lorry owner and the son of the appellant who was a cleaner on that lorry was engaged by N to help to remove the bales from the godowns and to stack them in the lorry. In the course of that work, the cleaner was accidentally killed. The appellant preferred a claim for compensation against the respondents under S. 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Held, that on the construction of the agreement, the work of the respondents must include removing goods from the mill company's godowns to the shop of the respondents (selling agents), and such work not only formed part of the business of the selling agents but was an essential part of it, and the respondents could not therefore escape liability by employing a contractor to do such work; (2) that the work, which was being done by the contractor at the time when the accident occurred, was work ordinarily done by the selling agents, and therefore the respondents were liable to pay compensation to the appellant for her son's death.

——Ss. 19 and 23—Commissioner for workmen's compensation—If Court or persona designata—C. P. Code S. 115.

The scheme of the Workmen's Compensation Act clearly shows that the matters which are set out in S. 19 of the Act are to be decided by the commissioner judicially and while deciding them he is performing judicial functions. He derives his authority from a statute passed by a competent authority and in exercising his jurisdiction he has the sanction of the law behind him. The commissioner acts as a Court and is a Court, and not a persona designata. Persona designata means a person indicated in a statute or legal instrument not by name but either by official designation or as one of a class. If he is invested with powers as a Court, the necessary implication is that the jurisdiction of the Court is enlarged and its decision is subject to all the incidents of such jurisdiction. If the powers are conferred on him not as a Court he is a mere persona designata and his decision will not be subject to the incidents of such jurisdiction as the Court ordinarily exercises. There is no real antithesis between "Court" and persona designata; in other words even a persona designata may be a Court. Whether he is a Court or not depends upon his powers and the functions that he has to discharge. The expression persona designata cannot be appropriately used with reference to a commissioner appointed under the Workmen's Compensation Act, because the Act does not single out any person by his official designation to be appointed as commissioner, nor does it say that only an official can be appointed as commissioner.

But the remedy of the applicant is to appeal to the High Court under S. 30 of the Act, and not to file a suit for damages and for compensation. The introduction into a Zaildari case of matters contained in confidential police records, which can only be known to the candidates by illicit means is undesirable, and it is equally undesirable that the confidential reports of individual subordinate officers of the Police Force should be discussed in open Court. BANKRUPTCY—Power to reopen transactions.

The Court has no jurisdiction to make an order which would in effect be an order reopening the accounts which were already dealt with in the master's certificate and reopening the question of remuneration which the master allowed to a receiver in an earlier partnership suit between the bankrupts. Re KAY AND LOVELL, TRUSTEE v. MOORE AND QUAIFE.

COMPANIES—Company in insolvent circumstances—Issue of debentures creating floating charges—Arrangement not bona fide for benefit of company—Validity—Test.

Where debentures are issued by a company in insolvent circumstance within six months of its winding up the test for deciding the validity of such issue is whether the transaction is to be regarded as one intended bona fide for the benefit of the company or whether it is intended merely to provide certain moneys, not for the benefit of the company, but for the benefit of certain creditors of the company. Where the effect of the issue of the debenture is to procure the payment to certain of the directors in preference to other creditors of the company of the sums due to them the floating charge created by the debenture is wholly invalid. Re DESTONE FABRICS, LTD. (1941) 1 All. ——Voluntary winding up—Debts incurred before and after—Priorities.

A liquidator in a voluntary winding up may without any sanction carry on the business of the company so far as may be necessary for the beneficial winding up thereof. If, in the proper exercise of this statutory power, he incurs obligations, those to whom he incurs them are entitled to be paid out of the assets of the company in priority to its creditors at the commencement of the winding up. There can be no question of the two classes of creditors ranking pari passu. If the condition is fulfilled the post liquidation creditors come first. If it is not they do not come in at all, or at any rate not until the preliquidation creditors have been satisfied. Re GREAT EASTERN ELECTRIC CO.

COMPANIES ACT (1929). S. 294—Application for avoidance of dissolution—Limitation.

The period of two years, for making an order declaring a dissolution void, is to be decided by taking the period between the date of the dissolution of the company and the date when the application under S. 294 of the Companies Act, 1929, is made. The order itself on such application need not be made within two years. (S. 294 provides inter alia that the Court can declare the dissolution of a company void at any time within two years of the date of the dissolution.) Re SEAD, LTD. (1941) 2 All E.R 466 (Ch.D.).

COMPANY IN LIQUIDATION—Unsuccessful proceedings by and order for costs against—Bank account in liquidator's name—If can be attached.

Where there was an order for costs against a company in liquidation which took out unsuccessful proceedings, the persons entitled to costs sought to attach moneys in a bank account standing to the credit of the liquidator. Held, that there was no relationship of banker and customer or debtor and creditor between the bank and the company and the amount cannot be attached. CONTRACT—Agreement to pay on breach, a certain amount as liquidated damages—"Damages or penalty"—Test for enforceability.

Agreed liquidated damages if to be enforced must be the result of a "genuine pre-estimate of damages". They do not include a sum fixed in terrorem covering breach of contracts of many varying degrees of importance the possible damages from which bear no relation to the fixed sum, and which obviously have at no time been estimated by the contracting parties. When the sum agreed is a penalty whatever it may be called in the agreement then the penal stipulation will not be enforced. MICHEL HABIB v SHEIKH SULEIMAN.

——Charterparty—Frustration caused by accident to ship—Burden of proof as to absence of negligence.

The appellants chartered their vessel the Kingswood to the respondents to carry a cargo from Port Pirie in South Australia to a British Port. A few days after her arrival off Port Pirie but before she became an "arrived ship," a violent and unexplained explosion took place on board. The damage caused to the steamer by the explosion was such as to frustrate the commercial object of the adventure. In an action by the charterers for damages, the shipowners claimed that they were absolved from all further liability.

Held, that the burden was on the party denying frustration to prove negligence or default of the party setting up the plea. Frustration will excuse non-performance unless it is proved to be self induced. Decision of Court of Appeal, (1940) 3 All.E.R. 211, reversed and that of Atkinson, J., (1940) 2 All.E.R. 46, restored. ——Damages—Failure to deliver goods—Loss of co-operation of editors who had written advertisement puffs in their periodicals—Damages—Right to.

The plaintiffs who were suppliers of cosmetics to the public contemplated putting on the market a new summer cream in small attractive containers suitable for ladies to carry about in their hand-bags. The plaintiff's managing director secured the co-operation of certain beauty editresses to write "puffs" of the product and also include in their columns particulars of a half price offer which said in substance "post me your name and address together with 7½*d.* in stamps, it will be sent to you by return." In response some 3 000 orders were received. The plaintiffs had entered into a contract with defendants for the supply of 10,000 of these containers which had to be specially made, and were not available in the market. In an action for damages for breach of the contract to supply the containers, claiming inter alia damages for the loss of the future co-operation of the editresses,

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages for loss of co-operation of the editresses in the absence of proof of essential facts to support such claim as one for loss of reputation. The mere fact that pecuniary loss is brought about by the loss of reputation caused by a breach of contract is not sufficient to preclude the plaintiff from recovering in respect of that pecuniary loss. To recover damages under this head the plaintiff must prove with sufficient certainty (1) the occurrence of the pecuniary loss, and (2) that such loss was within the contemplation of the defaulting party at the time when the contract was made. ——Formation—Order for goods on the understanding that the balance of purchase price can be had on hire purchase terms—How far a completed contract.

The plaintiffs wished to acquire a new motor van, giving in part exchange an old van. On 23—11—1937 an interview took place between the partner of the plaintiff firm and a representative of the defendants. On the following day the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs a letter giving a quotation for the van proposed to be acquired by plaintiffs and the allowance to be made for the old van on 6—12—1937 in an interview the offer contained in the letter of 24—11—1937 was accepted by the plaintiffs. On 7—12—1937 defendants wrote to plaintiffs thanking them for the order and asking them to send the official order to complete their records. This request was complied with by letter dated 8—12—1937 in the following terms: "We beg to acknowledge receipt of your acceptance of our order for vehicles as per specifications sent on Nov. 25." This order is given on the understanding that the balance of purchase price can be had on hire purchase terms over a period of 2 years Throughout the negotiation the plaintiff wanted to purchase on hire purchase terms and there was never any question of an out and out purchase by the plaintiffs. The defendants repudiated the transaction and in an action for damages for breach of contract,

Held, reversing the decision of the C. A. in (1940) 1 All. E. R. 59 that the crucial sentence. "This order is given on the understanding that the balance price can be had on hire purchase terms" was so vaguely expressed that it cannot standing by itself be given a definite meaning. ——Railway ticket—Conditions printed on back—Notice drawing attention to it blotted out by date stamp—Effect.

Conditions were printed on the back of the railway ticket referring passengers to conditions contained in the railway time tables and bills protecting the railway company against claims for damages for negligence. On the ticket issued to the plaintiff the words "For conditions see back" were blotted out by the date stamp which was put on the face of the ticket. In a claim for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff by falling into a hole while she was leaving the station, by reason of the defendant's alleged negligence in leaving the hole in a passage,

Held, that the railway company did not do that which was reasonably sufficient to give the plaintiff notice of the conditions and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages. SUGAR v. LONDON, MIDLAND & SCOTTISH RAILWAY CO.

——Restriction on dealing with goods except under licence under war emergency legislation — Whether excuse for non-performance.

Under a contract dated Aug. 3, 1939, sellers agreed to sell to buyers a quantity of butter beans to be shipped from ports in Madagascar to London as per bills of lading dated or to be dated October/November 1939. One of the conditions on the back of the contract provided that sellers were to give notice of appropriation and tender documents. Before the due date war broke out and by food control legislation buying and selling cereals outside the United Kingdom without a licence was forbidden. The sellers did not apply for the necessary licence by the due date for appropriation and tender. On Feb. 14, 1940, the sellers made enquiries from the Cereal Control Board who replied that on the outbreak of the war private trading ceased. It was argued on behalf of the sellers that licence would have been refused even if they had applied before the due date and that they were excused from performing the contract.

Held, the sellers having failed to take the steps necessary to enable them to perform their contract by applying for a licence they are not excused from performance of the contract. TAYLOR & CO. v. LANDANER & CO. (1940) 4 All E.R. 335 (K B.D.).

On 11—6—1939 the paper was sold to another company which did not retain the services of the plaintiff. In a claim for damages for breach of contract,

Held, that the sale of the newspaper operated as an improper dismissal of the plaintiff and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages up to the date when the broken contract would have expired. "Design" may be embodied in a sketch illustrative of the model itself, e.g., in a sketch of a brooch or doll or in a brooch or doll itself. Unregistered designs are not subject of design copyright. ——Solicitor's lien on costs ordered to be paid to his client—If "property recovered or preserved" within the meaning of Solicitors Act (1932), S. 69—Solicitor's common law right.

By decree nisi in a divorce petition the husband the petitioner was ordered to pay his wife's taxed costs. The intervener in the wife's cross petition had previously been dismissed from the suit with costs against the wife. The wife's costs were taxed at the sum of £826-15 10 to meet which there was a sum of £550 in Court. The sum was paid out to the appellant who was the wife's solicitor leaving a balance of £276-15-10 unprovided for. On July 31, 1940, an order was made for payment of this balance to the appellant by the respondent. The costs of the intervener were taxed at £302-1-11 and by a document dated July 3, 1940, the intervener assigned this sum to the respondent in consideration of his paying her a like sum in cash. The appellant took out a summons on August 23, 1940, for an order that he should have a charge to the extent of £276-15-10 upon the costs ordered to be paid by the respondent to his wife.

Held, that without deciding whether costs were not "property recovered or preserved" within the meaning of Solicitors Act (1932), S. 69 the solicitor's claim could be made at common law for a charging order on a sum ordered to be paid as costs. A person who seeks to rectify a deed upon the ground of mistake must be required to establish, in the clearest and most satisfactory manner that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued concurrently in the minds of all parties down to the time of its execution and also must be able to show exactly and precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought. Held, that so long as the admissions are not used to prove non-access or non-intercourse, the statements standing alone are admissible and quite sufficient to support a finding of adultery. FRAMPTON v. FRAMPTON AND BUSHELL. (1941) 1 All. E.R. 305(P.D A.).

On an intervention by the King's Proctor for rescinding the decree on the ground that the husband was alive, it was contended for the petitioner that the presumption of death was a ground for divorce and the fact of death was not material.

In a claim for an injunction to restrain the defendants from so working their mines as to let down the surface and thus damage the plaintiff's property the defence was that there was both a custom and a right by prescription to work their mine so as to let down the surface without paying compensation.

In an application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus against committal to prison of a fugitive offenders from India before being sent to India without order of the Magistrate for extradition under the Fugitive Offenders Act,

Held, (i) All that is necessary while asking for extradition is to show that the person against whom the order is sought is one accused of having committed an offence in India and that he has left India, when he becomes, in the words of the Act, "a fugitive from India." (ii) All that is required in this case is a warrant issued in India by a person having lawful authority to issue it duly endorsed and authenticated in the United Kingdom for an offence to which the Fugitive Offenders Act applies. (iii) No objection to a warrant on the ground of duplication can be effective although the prosecution may be called upon to elect because the committal for one of those offences is not rendered void by the inclusion in the warrant of another charge upon which no committal was asked for or has been ordered. (iv) Depositions taken in India in the trial of the conspirators, but in the absence of the fugitive are not rendered inadmissible by reason of the fact that they were not taken "for the purposes of the Fugitive Offenders Act." (v) The fact that only part of the depositions was used in the Magistrate's Court did not make them inadmissible either. (vi) Where an affidavit of an expert on Indian Law was nothing more in truth than a forensic argument, the Court would be justified in interpreting for itself the relevant Indian statutes. INSURANCE—Fire insurance—Articles concealed in a grate—Fire carelessly lit—Damage—Right to under insurance.

The plaintiff took a Lloyd's comprehensive policy insuring her against loss by fire, burglary and housebreaking and other cause, at her flat. There was an attempted burglary at her flat during the summer which made her nervous about the safety of her jewellery while she was out and the flat was empty. While going out one day in addition to her jewellery worth £500 she had £100 in bank notes and she felt more uneasy than usual about the safety in the empty flat and hid them rolled in a newspaper in the fire place mixed up with other paper already there. The plaintiff returned home late in the afternoon and feeling cold lighted the fire, forgetting all about the jewels and bank notes. In an action against the underwriters for the loss, it was contended that waste where damage is done to insured property, by a fire in a place where fire is intended to be—where the fire has not broken its bounds—the loss is not covered because such a "fire" is not a "fire" within the meaning of the policy. It was said that there must be ignition where no ignition ought to be in order to create liability.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed and if the underwriters wished to avoid liability, they must ———Life insurance—Parent effecting policies in name of his children—Death of parent leaving will—Person entitled to the policies.

During his lifetime the testator took out two insurance policies on the respective lives of his two children. All the premiums on the policies were paid by the testator down to the time of his death and on the death of the testator the question arose as to whether the money payable under the policies was the property of the testator's estate or whether the child named in each of the policies was entitled to the money assured. In the proposal form the father was described as the grantee who was stated to be desirous of effecting an assurance on the life on behalf and for the benefit of the person therein named as "the life assured"—namely, the child.

Held, that the life assured was the person entitled to the money payable under the policy and if there were any further payments to be made the person whose life was assured was the person to make those payments. On the wording of the policy there was sufficient to establish a trust in favour of the children as against the father who no doubt effected the policy. ———Marine insurance—"Insurance of cargo including risks of non delivery until discharge at port of destination"—Termination of risk.

An all risk policy of marine insurance provided inter alia for risks of theft, pilferage and non delivery, while on board the vessel until discharged at port of destination and whilst in transit by land and/or water to final destination there or in the interior. According to the practice of the port of discharge the goods (timber) were put on to the quay alongside, close up to the ship in a stack or bulk and was subsequently sorted by the port authorities. The consignees were not allowed to put their hands on the timber until it had been so sorted. In a claim by consignees against underwriters under the policy,

Held, that the final destination was the place at which the goods arrived when they were bulked or stacked. The removal of the goods to another part of the shed does not extend the destination. RENTON v. BLACK SEA INSURANCE CO. (1941) 1 All.E R. 149 (Ch. D.).

——Marine insurance policy—Clause exempting liability for frustration of voyage—Effect on right to recover for constructive total loss of the goods on account of scuttling of the German steamers carrying the goods.

A marine insurance policy covered war risks as well as marine risks and the policy contained a "frustration clause". The policy was warranted free of any claim based upon loss of, or frustration of the insured voyage or venture caused by arrests, restraints or detriment of kings, princes peoples, usurpers or persons attempting to usurp power. The goods were being carried on German ships which were directed by the German government on the outbreak of the war to take refuge in a neutral port, or if possible return to Germany with the cargo or as a last resort to scuttle. The master of the vessels ultimately scuttled the ship In a claim by cargo owners against the underwriters,

Held, the insured having suffered a constructive total loss of the goods was entitled to recover under the policy. The frustration clause afforded no defence to the under writers as it applied only to the loss of the voyage which cannot exclude the right of recovery for the loss of the goods. (1940) 4 All. E. An insurance company asked for a declaration that at the material date they were apart from any provision contained in the policy, entitled to avoid the policy on the ground that it had been obtained by non-disclosure of material facts or by representations of facts which were false in material particulars. Under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act the person whose land is compulsorily acquired is entitled to compensation but since the value of the land as building land could only be realised by the removal of the business, compensation for disturbance of business could not be awarded because the value of the land as building land exceeded its value as agricultural land plus the value of the minerals plus the loss by disturbance. LANDLORD—Defective condition of lift—Liability to visitor of tenants—Liability of repairer to users of the lift.

The plaintiff, the managing clerk to a firm of solicitors, in the course of his professional affairs went to a block of flats, owned by X and managed by Y and Co. in order to call upon a tenant living there. Owing to the defective condition of the hydraulic lift plaintiff sustained severe injuries and brought an action for damages against X the owner, Y and Co, the managers and Z the lift engineers who were responsible for "inspecting the lift every calendar month during working hours to adjust, clean and lubricate the mechanism, to provide the cleaning materials and necessary lubricants and to attend also at all reasonable working hours to adjust the mechanism in case of stoppage or irregular running between the periodical visits. The day before the accident the lift engineers attended and adjusted the mechanism.

Held, (1) that plaintiff was not an invitee for the purposes of the occupier. He was only permitted to use the lift for his own purposes to call on a tenant and so was a licensee and the only duty of X was to warn him of any danger of which he actually knew. (2) In undertaking the carriage of the plaintiff in the lift X was under a duty to use reasonable care to provide a vehicle reasonably safe for the conveyance of the plaintiff, as well as to exercise reasonable care in the conduct of that vehicle throughout the course of the journey. (3) The complete maintenance of the lift was not entrusted to the independent contractors and therefore X had not discharged his duty to see that the lift was reasonably safe and X was accordingly liable. (4) As regards the lift engineers they were also liable to the users of the lift because the accident was due to their failure through their workmen to do their contractual work with reasonable skill and care and no intermediate examination could be anticipated. LIMITATION—Period of limitation extended by later Act after expiration of the period under earlier Act—Amendment of statement to claim making out a new cause of action—Not to be allowed.

On December 11, 1939, the plaintiff was involved in an accident in which she was injured by a tramcar belonging to the defendants—a public authority. The period of 6 months within which an action had to be commenced expired on June 11, 1940 under the Public Authorities Protection Act then in force. The writ was issued on April 11, 1940, claiming damages for negligence without specifying the particular type of negligence of which the defendants were alleged to have been guilty. On May 28, 1940 a statement was put in making it clear that the complaint against defendant was one of negligent driving by the tramcar driver. On November 1, 1940 an application for leave to deliver an amended statement of claim was made. The amendment sought set up a new and different case that defendants were negligent in maintaining the roadway.

Held, that the amendment set up an entirely new cause of action and was barred under the Act as it stood. The introduction of a longer period of one year's limitation by amendment to the statute coming into operation 19 days after the limitation of 6 months under the provisions of the unamended Act cannot be of any avail as the cause of action was already completely barred. It is not sufficient to debar a plaintiff from recovering against the employers, of another man also in their employment, by whose negligence the plaintiff has suffered, merely to assert that they were both servants of the defendant company or firm in the sense that they were both paid their wages by that firm or company. The rule does not apply where the injured man and the negligent co-employee are not engaged in the same common work, or are not fellow labourers in the same work, or are not engaged in different departments of duty. ———Costs—Case involving construction of wills—Unsuccessful appeal—Costs — Numerous parties — Persons not likely to be heard served with notice—If entitled to costs—Proper procedure.

In a case involving construction of wills only in exceptional cases will the Court allow the costs of an unsuccessful appeal out of the estate. Such exceptional cases are where large interests, interests of unborn persons and so on are at stake, when it is perfectly proper that a second opinion should be taken. But where the point is fairly brought before the Court by the trustees and there is an appeal which is without foundation the unsuccessful appellant must be ordered to pay the costs regard to questions arising in bulk on an originating summons, where there are necessarily numerous persons many of them having exactly the same interest, it is always open to an appellant to give to the other parties a notice that he will object to more than one set of costs being allowed to the respondents who are all in the same interest. The matter is then considered by the Court, and, if the Court comes to the conclusion that it was not right for the parties to be separately represented it may decide appropriately as to costs. It would be contrary to modern practice to deprive the trustees on an originating summons of their costs in the Court of appeal. STUART, In re: JOHNSON v. WILLIAMS.

The defendant failed to make the payment within the extended time and then on December 30 he applied to the Master for a further 7 days' time. The defendant shipped on plaintiff's vessel at Brisbane parcels of wheat under various bills of lading. On the voyage the wheat was alleged to have been infested with weevils which caused damage to bags of flour shipped by other shippers and the plaintiffs having been forced to pay damages and incur expenses claimed indemnity. The bill of lading provided that the contract shall be governed by the law of England and in a later clause it said "All the terms, provisions and conditions of the Australian Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924, are to apply to the contract and if anything contained herein be inconsistent with the said Act to the extent of the inconsistency it shall be null and void. The defendants being domiciled in Australia the plaintiff obtained leave to serve a writ out of jurisdiction. S. 9 of the Act provided that "All parties to any bill of lading relating to the carriage of goods from any place in Australia shall be deemed to have intended to contract according to the laws in force at the place of shipment and any stipulation to the contrary shall be null and void and of no effect." In an application to set aside the leave to serve the writ out of jurisdiction,

Held, that the provision that the contract is to be governed by English law, having been made by another part of the contract to be null and void, the Court had no jurisdiction to allow a writ to be issued out of the jurisdiction of the English Courts at the instance of the plaintiff. The appellants were private companies and were the freeholders of the Luxor Cinema at Eastbourne and the Regal Cinema at Hastings respectively. The board of directors of each of the appellant companies was composed of the same individuals and one W. B. who was the managing director of both companies, held the majority of the issued shares. On the death of W. B. on 11—9—1935 his son H. B. became a director in his place. Prior to his death W. B. in the summer of 1935 had asked the companies' auditor E. to get an offer for the purchase of the two cinemas and E. said that he would approach his "client" meaning thereby the respondent. W. B. was alleged to have said that E. would have a commission. After W. B.'s death another director G. told E. after a directors' meeting that the directors had decided to sell the cinemas and that E.'s client should make the offer through the companies' solicitor who had authority to deal with the matter. E. told the respondent of this and the respondent shortly afterwards introduced to E. a prospective purchaser willing to negotiate for the properties. E. took the respondent to meet the companies' solicitor. Ultimately on 11—10—1935 after negotiations the solicitor's firm replied to E. confirming that on completion of the sale of the cinemas to the purchaser a procuration fee of £10,000 was to be paid to the respondent. At the directors' meeting held on 2—10—1935 to consider the offer, H. B. opposed the motion for accepting the offer. The sale was not proceeded with and the disposal of the cinemas ultimately took place by way of a sale of shares in the appellant companies to another party. In an action by the respondent for damages for not carrying through the sale, thereby preventing the respondent earning his commission, Held, upon a true construction of the contract the agent also takes the risk of the owner not being willing to conclude the bargain with the agent's nominee and the respondent's claim must fail. An implied term that the principal will not refuse to go on with the sale cannot be inferred and as no binding contract was made between vendor and purchaser, the agent was not entitled to the commission. PRIZE LAW — Exchange of goods in transitu—Immediately before hostilities—Seizure—Effect.

Where under a contract for the sale of goods made before the outbreak of war between an enemy seller and a neutral buyer a transfer of the property in the goods is made while the goods are still in transitu, the following propositions are clearly settled:—(i) If it is proved that the contract was made in the ordinary course of business, and not in contemplation of war, and was a bona fide transaction in the sense that there was no fraudulent or collusive reservation of interests to the seller, then although the buyer has not taken actual delivery before seizure, his claim is recognised in prize. (ii) If however the contract, though made bona fide, was made in contemplation of the outbreak of the war the buyer cannot establish his claim to the goods unless he has taken actual delivery before seizure. But in the case of a British buyer (a) no considerations founded on the comity of nations can apply and (b) a British claimant is subject as a neutral claimant is not, to the municipal law as to trading with the enemy so far as it affects the matter. The document recorded the relationship of hire purchase between the hirer and the owner in the form of an offer made by the hirer on a printed form signed by the hirer on May 11, 1938. On the same date a document purporting to be an invoice was signed by the dealer purporting to invoice the apparatus to the hirer. In an action by the hirer against the dealer alleging a breach of warranty of fitness of the apparatus it was contended that the transaction was a sale and not of hire and that the defendant was liable as vendor for the breach of warranty.

Owing to an obstruction in the vicinity of the aerodrome in the shape of trees a pilot was injured by crashing into the trees. In a claim for damages, it was contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as he knew of the existence of the trees he was in fault in hitting them.

Held, (i) that the owner of the aerodrome was liable on account of the breach of the statutory condition in the licence. TORT.

S. 186 of the Customs Consolidation Act made it an offence for any person to knowingly harbour, keep or conceal any uncustomed goods and empowered the customs officer to detain an offender. Where a customs officer detained a ship's steward merely on suspicion that he was harbouring uncustomed goods but not in fact guilty of the offence, Held, per Scott and Clauson, L. JJ. (Mackinnon, L. J., dissenting) that the person so detained is entitled to recover damages for false imprisonment. The statute empowers only detention of "offenders" and not suspects. GORMAN v. BARNARD AND ANOTHER.

———Invitation by management of a non-provided school—Injury to invitee by collapse of floor due to want of repair—Liability—Public Authorities Protection Act—Limitation under.

A non-provided school's building was nearly 100 years old. The headmaster with the authority of the managers invited among others the plaintiff whose son was a pupil at the school to attend an exhibition on the premises. Owing to the want of repair the flooring collapsed and the plaintiff having been injured sued the managers for damages. It was found as a fact that those who were charged with the duty of keeping the premises in repair had not taken reasonable care to discharge that duty. It was the duty of the manager to keep the premises in good repair out of voluntary subscriptions or donations and in some cases, trust funds or endowments The action was commenced 22 months after the accident and the managers claimed that it was barred under Public Authorities Protection Act, S. 1.

Held, that the managers authorised the exhibitions in the course of carrying on the public elementary school and the managers can avail themselves of the protection of the Public Authorities Protection Act and the action not having been commenced within 12 months was barred. ———Negligence causing death—Damages for "loss of expectation of life"—Assessment—Considerations.

In an appeal against the award of £1,200 as damages for loss of expectation of life of a boy aged 2½ years in a motor accident,

Held, that the damages in fact is incapable of being measured in coin of the realm with any approach to real accuracy. The assessment of damages is not to be made by applying the statistical or actuarial test. Such damages should not be calculated solely, or even mainly, on the basis of the length of life which is lost. Before damages are awarded in respect of the shortened life of a given individual under this head it is necessary for the Court to be satisfied that the circumstances of the individual life were calculated to lead on balance, to a positive measure of happiness. The question is not whether the deceased had the capacity or ability to appreciate that his further life on earth would bring him happiness. The test is not subjective and the right sum to award depends on an objective estimate of what kind of future on earth the victim might have enjoyed, whether he had justly estimated that future or not. No regard must be had to financial losses or gains during the period of which the victim has been deprived. The damages are in respect of loss of life not of loss of future pecuniary prospects. The uncertainty about the childs future must also be considered. In assessment of damages under this head a very moderate figure should be chosen. The damages awarded was reduced to £200 in view of the fact that the circumstances of the infant

In a black out the position of a pedestrian in the road is different (particularly if he is wheeling a bicycle, and quite apart from the regulation compelling the carrying on the bicycle of a rear light) from what it is in time of peace when motor cars have full head lights and when the conditions of difficulty caused by the black out do not exist. In black out conditions, there is imposed on a person in the road the new duty of bearing in mind the difficulty which the driver of an on-coming vehicle will have of seeing a person or a vehicle bearing no light and of realising that it is his duty as a person in the road to take all reasonable steps to minimise such difficulty. ———Negligence—School boys allowed to volunteer for work on farms on holidays—Injury while so working—Headmaster if liable for damages for not providing proper supervision.

Some boys including the infant plaintiff from a school volunteered for farm service on a half holiday at a farm near the school. They were not accompanied by any master to supervise or control them. They were to receive 6*d*. per hour for their work, the wages being paid to the school for them. After starting work, when the farmer was absent the boys began playing the fool by throwing potatoes at each other and continued their ragging for 30 or 40 minutes. One boy uttered something opprobrious to another boy, which angered the latter, who replied by throwing a lump of earth at his insulter. who ducked his head and escaped the missile which unfortunately hit the infant plaintiff gravely injuring one eye which had to be removed. In an action by the father of the plaintiff for damages against the headmaster of the school,

Held, that the duty of the headmaster being that of an ordinary careful parent, there was no breach of duty in allowing the boys to work on the farm. No headmaster is obliged to arrange for constant and perpetual watching out of school hours. CAMKIN v. BISHOP.

warning was given to the plaintiff and others using the street and no step was taken by the defendants to prevent the public from walking or standing under the roof in question. There was a covenant for repair by owners.

Held, (1) that the covenant for repairs by the owner did not affect the liability as the injury was caused not by want of repair but by the fall of the snow, and the occupier was liable for nuisance as in the case the defendant having had an opportunity failed to remove the snow and abate the nuisance. The lessees of certain land on the banks of a river in agreement with the local authority erected a wall along the river bank to prevent flooding and to protect their land and the highway. While re-erecting the wall with the permission of the owners, gaps through which workmen passed materials were left at either end. The river rose rapidly and the adjoining owner's premises was damaged by the water which overflowed through the gaps. In an action for damages based on negligence,

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—Form of order treating partial incapacity as total incapacity.

In a case where the partial incapacity of the injured workman was treated as total incapacity the County Court Judge's order awarding compensation was in the following form: "I order that the incapacity of the said applicant (if and so long as he remains unemployed) shall be treated as total incapacity resulting from the said injury subject to the condition that such order shall cease to be in force if the said applicant receives unemployment benefit and to no other conditions. ———Payment of compensation to workman suffering from industrial disease with knowledge that he made a false statement that he did not suffer previously from such disease—Implied agreement to pay compensation—If can be avoided on the ground of misstatement made by workman on entering service.

A workman on entering the employment represented that he had not previously suffered from nystagmus. The representation was false and it was found to have been made wilfully. During his employment the workman again contracted nystagmus and obtained the necessary medical certificate to enable him to compensation. On a medical examination on behalf of the employers it was discovered that the workman had previously suffered from the disease. The employers without further question, paid to the workman compensation at the full rate for total incapacity till a certain date when the employers ceased to pay the compensation on the ground that the workman was disentitled to it because of the false statement he made on entering their service.

Held, that when a workman claims compensation and in the case of an industrial disease produces the necessary medical certificate and when the employer, without saying that he does so without prejudice or pending further inquiry, or the like, thereupon pays, and continues to pay, the full amount for which the Act provides, and offers no evidence as to why he makes these payments, the only inference which can be drawn, is that the payment involves a recognition of liability and an implication that the employer agrees that the workman is entitled to it. The employers cannot subsequently say that the agreement to pay is vitiated by any misstatement made on entering service. PEASE AND PARTNERS LTD. v. BIRCH.

Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme (1931) made in accordance with the Workmen's Compensation Act provided inter alia for compensation for workmen employed in "The process specified and those processes only" in the trades thereunder mentioned and in the case of works engaged in the manufacture of steel or in steel foundaries the specified processes are thus described "crushing or grinding of silica rock, or any handling of incidental to such crushing or grinding, or crushing or grinding of bricks or other articles containing not less than 80 per cent. total silica. A work man was engaged in such works and performing the following duties—He built and repaired smelting furnaces and ladles, and, while engaged on the former, handled bricks containing more than 80 per cent. of silica. He had to break down old layers of bricks in the inside of the furnace and build up new layers. The process required use of crowbars to break them down and new bricks often had to be chipped to shape. These involved the creation of large quantities of silica dust which the workman had to inhale and in consequence contracted silicosis. In a claim for compensation, Held, that the work amounted to "crushing bricks containing more than 80 per cent. of silica" under the scheme and the workman was entitled to compensation. "Crushing" does not necessarily mean crushing to powder. (1940) 1 All. E.R. 235, reversed. FORESTER v. LLANELLY STEEL CO.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT (1925) S.1.

A girl of 15 to 16 years of age was employed as a domestic servant by a farmer. One day she was asked by the farmer's wife to take a can of tea to the farmer, who was working two miles away in a field. She took the tea to the farmer and waited until he had consumed it, when it was her duty to take the empty can back to the farm. One of the horses in the field was going back to the farm. She asked the man in charge of the horse if she might ride the horse and he let her do so as she was accustomed to riding. The horse was startled and the girl fell off and injured herself.
